*Up-date on the roofing project and High school gym floor

b. Scholarship information /Linda Hunter

*As a scholarship coordinator, I get the information through mail or email and get the information out to the students by posters and around the school and announcements over the loudspeaker system. The student gets the applications from me and fills out the information and gets the application back to me before the deadlines. I then compile, copy and make packets of the applications for the scholarships committee.

The scholarship committee in the high school consists of 9 department heads in these areas; Science, Math, English, Social Studies, Art, PE/health, computer, vocational, Lakota Language. The committee meets to decide on scholarship recipients when needed. I (Peggy) serve as the coordinator of the committee to set up the time, place and contact the members. I also get the scholarships organized and the criteria for each one documented and this information goes to the committee. The scholarship committee was set up this way because the teachers are the ones that know the senior students in the academic, athletic, and leadership roles. They are in contact with the students all day for years while they attended Little Wound High School. They see the student in a different perspective than I see the student.

I don't vote on the committee unless there is a tie, but with 9 members that is not often.

The Principal or instructional service irector has never served on the committee. They don't know who gets the scholarship until graduation day.

This system has seemed to work for the last 7 years.

Some suggestions to improve the committee might be to include the school board, and the athletic director for the extracurricular activities the students are involved with and the Dean of students for behavior and attendance of the students. Another improvement would be to include an essay about what the student goals are and how the scholarships would benefit them on the applications. We might look at having short interviews with the students on certain scholarships.

Please see attached letters of information about scholarship committee.

The Collaborative Circle For the Well-Being of South Dakota's Native Children (The Circle)

Is seeking an Independent Contractor who is an enrolled member of a federally recognized South Dakota tribe, to assist in the growth and advancement of The Circle. The Circle is a partnership of the nine Sioux tribes of South Dakota, the South Dakota Department of Social Services/Division of Child Protection Services, Native American family members, and child welfare providers from across South Dakota. The payment for the scope of work is competitive and sufficient to compensate for benefits. The Independent Contractor is not an employee of the The Circle.

This is a year contract which may be renewed on an annual basis if funding permits. The Independent Contractor will support the work of the members and assist in the creation of regional collaborative groups throughout the state. The Independent Contractor must be motiviated, proactive, and organized. Interested individuals should have knowledge of the nine South Dakota tribes, and experience in child welfare and community organizing.

Applicants should also have strong leadership, interpersonal, writing, analysis, and budget skills. Preference will be given to candidates with knowledge of and experience with The Circle. In-state travel will be required and applicants must have reliable transportation. Interested and qualified individuals should send a cover letter and resume, including three business related references, postmarked by March 31, 2007, to:

Susan Dubray
Alternate Co-Chair of the Collaborative Circle
PO Box 604
Pine Ridge, SD 57770.

ELIGIBILITY FOR DIRECT CARE:

To be eligible for Direct Care at Rosebud IHS Hospital (RBCHCF) you must meet the following criteria:

1) Be an ENROLLED MEMBER OR DESCENDENT OF AN ENROLLED MEMBER OF a Federally Recognized Tribe/Nation of the United States LIVING within the United States. Canadian/MEXICAN tribal members are not eligible UNLESS APPROPRIATELY DESIGNATED IN THE SEVERAL TRIBES WITH COMMON BOUNDARIES.

2) Proof of eligibility is to be provided when you present to the clinic FOR THE FIRST TIME. HOWEVER, if required documentation of proof is not made available AT THE FIRST VISIT, IT MUST BE PROVIDED AT the next visit or within 30 days OF THE VISIT OR services will not be allowed at Rosebud IHS Hospital (Rosebud) UNTIL PROOF IS PROVIDED.

If enrolled: then you must provide proof of eligibility in the form of:
1. Tribal document which contains an enrollment number and degree of Indian Blood
2. and birth certificate
3. And social security card
4. BIA certification of descendant

If not enrolled, then you must provide proof of lineage in the form of:
1. Tribal document of parent/grandparent
2. and birth certificate(s) proving lineage
3. And social security card
4. BIA certification of descendant

It is the responsibility of the patient to obtain this proof.
All proof must be in original form.

Todd County High School Lockdown

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

MISSION - The 2006-07 school year at Todd County High School has been grueling for principal, Victoria Sherman. Sherman graduated out of Oglala Lakota College in Kyle in the administrative career track and in her second year out she has been immersed in the more challenging and unexpected features of educational administration.

The high school has received a total of 12 bomb threats and one recent shooting threat. It is almost routine, anymore, as many times the public, community and parents are not immediately aware of any impending threats until students arrive at home and announce that their day included having to evacuate their building or having been "locked down" and not allowed to leave the confines of their particular classroom.

According to a press release from Rosebud Police Chief, Charles Red Crow, last Tuesday, officers and special agents from the Rosebud Law Enforcement Services responded to a 9-1-1 call from administrators at Todd County High School that a threatening note had been found. It said that everyone one was going to be shot dead at 12:30 p.m.

Officers contacted school administrators and had them lock down the school and no was allowed near the windows. Faculty and students were "locked down" for a total of three hours while officers arrived on the scene and established a perimeter. No one was allowed in or out of the building. Special Agent Martell took charge of traffic on the north side of the building and fielded questions about the incident from the Lakota Country Times.. He said that as soon as the

Oglala Sioux Tribe update:
Senator Thune's staff visit Pine Ridge

Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - Members of Senator John Thune's South Dakota staff spent Monday and Tuesday on Pine Ridge Reservation to get a first hand look at the tribe's most important needs and to visit with a variety of tribal programs, chartered organizations, community leaders and elders to hear about concerns and issues.

Jeannie Faber, out of the Sioux Falls office and Sandy Massy, out of Rapid City, visited the Lakota Express, Pine Ridge Area Chamber of Commerce, the Lakota Fund, Anpetu Luta Otipi, Oglala Sioux Parks and Recreation Authority, Oglala Sioux Rural Water Supply System and Oglala Nation Education Coalition on Monday.

"We were acting as Senator Thune's eyes and ears," said Sandy Massy who has worked for the Senator out of Rapid City for the four years he was in the House and the last two in the Senate, "the trip was very well organized out of Donna Salomon's office and we were treated very well; you always hear about the struggles and difficulties and about the poor conditions, this trip focused on the positive, about development that was going on and we had a chance to talk to people who have such a heart to work for the people."

On Tuesday, Thune's staff stopped in at the OSRWSS Operation and Maintenance office in Pine Ridge, met with John Steele at the Red Cloud building, met with elders including Chief Oliver Red Cloud, Fred Sitting Up and Vincent Black Feather, met with tribal program directors at Billy Mills Hall, visited the SuAnne Big Crow Boy's and Girl's Club, talked to Solid Waste and OST Environmental Protection, stopped in at the Health Administration at the old hospital and visited the new detention facility south of Pine Ridge.

"Even though I have talked with Jeannie at a number of events around the region, this was their first visit to the Lakota Express in Kyle," said Karlene Hunter, Lakota Express owner, "we struggle as Native American entrepreneurs and its good to see Senator Thune and his staff reaching out more, they are realizing that Indian Country has some political clout and will have an impact down the road."

"We enjoyed hosting Thune's staff, its good to see them make an appearance here on Pine Ridge Reservation," said Ivan Sorbel, executive director of the Pine Ridge Area Chamber of Commerce, "we talked about JOM funding, about the needed development of infrastructure on the reservation and what impact the freezing of earmarked funds has on grant dependent organizations."

Steele puts together management team

Working on the principle of shared responsibility, tribal president, John Steele has put together a management team to work on a variety of issues and areas of concern for the tribe including William Shorty Brewer ansd Mel Lone Hill in criminal investigation and gaming, Dave Pourier in land issues, Donna Salomon in Parks and Recreation, health care tho-

TWO SECTIONS

By Vicky Wicks

When the Equal Justice Commission went out on the road to gather information, "People were skeptical that this report - this commission - was actually going to do anything," said Tracey Fischer, a Sturgis attorney who served as executive director of the EJC.

But South Dakota Supreme Court Justice John K. Konenkamp, who co-chaired the EJC with retired Chief Tribal Judge Patrick A. Lee, "didn't want it to be just another commission," Fischer said. "He wanted to see change."

According to Lynn Sudbeck and Judith Roberts, attorneys with the Unified Judicial System, Konenkamp is getting his wish: change is burgeoning in the court system.

Cultural awareness training for court personnel was a primary recommendation of the committee, Sudbeck said, and in May 2006, judges and circuit court administrators received spring training that included programs covering current trends in Indian law, means of addressing poverty, and cultural competence.

This year clerks and court services officers will receive culture awareness training in April, and court reporters are scheduled to receive the training in the fall, she said.

However, there will not necessarily be a cultural component to training sessions every year. According to Sudbeck, training topics rotate and are repeated when they haven't been presented for a while.

Fischer said she's concerned that UJS will "do training once, and that's it," and new UJS employees won't receive culture-specific training, possibly for years, unless it's incorporated into new-hire orientation.

Judd Thompson, chief court services officer for the Seventh Circuit, said there are currently plans being drawn up for a statewide curriculum for training court services officers, and cultural sensitivity and awareness have been discussed as possible components of that training.

The EJC recommended inviting tribal judges to provide training in cultural competency to state judges and to reestablish the South Dakota State and Tribal Judge Forum. Roberts said the South Dakota Supreme Court is currently taking steps to restore the forum, which has traditionally consisted of three state judges and three tribal judges.

For many years, tribal judges have been invited to attend fall and spring judges' training sessions, Sudbeck said, and the state offers to pay for their room and board. "But we don't get a lot of attendance," she said.

The EJC report also noted an under-representation of Native employees in criminal justice and recommended that the court system make efforts to recruit and hire minority employees. "An impartial system of justice should be as diverse as the people it serves," the report states.

UJS has always sent announcements of openings to tribal courts and tribal administration human resources, Sudbeck said, but now, starting in December 2006, positions are also advertised with Native American colleges and universities. Job listings are also located on the UJS website and accessible to anyone, she said.

Non-English speaking defendants feel particularly disadvantaged in the court system, according to the report. There are no standards for language interpreters, the report notes; state law says interpreters must be "qualified," but the term isn't defined. But Roberts said interpreters are certified by member organizations, and lists of interpreters are kept by clerks and court administrators.

Jeff Krattenmaker, court administrator for the Seventh Circuit, said that the defense attorney determines whether the defendant can communicate and understand what's being said in the courtroom. If not, Krattenmaker will assist the defendant in

to have Supreme Court step in

By:
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON -- The Supreme Court on Monday rejected appeals by American Indians to step into a decade-old lawsuit accusing the government of mismanaging more than $100 billion in oil, gas, timber and other royalties from their lands.

The justices declined to disturb an appeals court ruling that removed U.S. District Judge Royce Lamberth from the case. The appeals court said Lamberth, who held successive Democratic and Republican Interior Department secretaries in contempt of court, had lost his objectivity in the case.

The court also refused to review another appeals court ruling that reversed Lamberth's order that the Interior Department disconnect its computers from the Internet for failing to provide adequate security for the Indians' trust records.

The class-action suit, filed in 1996 by Blackfeet Indian Elouise Cobell, deals with individual Indians' lands. Several tribes have also sued, claiming mismanagement of their lands.

Earlier this month the government proposed paying $7 billion to settle the lawsuits, but only roughly half of that would go to the plaintiffs. Lawmakers have said they plan hearings on the proposal. The Indians have said they would accept $27.5 billion to end the litigation.

One memorable challenge was finding an interpreter for a defendant from a small region of the Sudan who spoke Dinka, Krattenmaker said. But a search produced results. "We were fortunate enough to find a couple of students at the School of Mines who spoke Dinka," he said.

Krattenmaker said he maintains lists of interpreters, and at times uses the Language Line, a 1-800 dial-up service with more than 100 interpreters who can be on the phone rather quickly. "That's how we get by with most of the arraignments," he said.

There are so many variables in each defendant's situation and so many employees involved in the criminal justice process that preventing bias or the perception of bias is likely impossible.

Therefore, it is crucial to address perceived bias on a case-by-case basis, using a bias-free statewide grievance procedure.

Roberts said anyone with a complaint about an employee of the judicial system should start by writing a letter to the presiding judge.

Seventh Circuit Presiding Judge Jeff Davis said that most complaints should first be handled locally, and if a resolution can't be reached, he will direct complainants to contact UJS in Pierre.

Clerks of court have an advisory committee, and court services officers have a statewide organization that helps them to assess situations, Davis said, but "the ultimate administrative authority lies with Chief Justice David Gilbertson" of the South Dakota Supreme Court.

Defendants can file complaints without fear of retaliation from their probation officer or other court personnel, Davis said. "We just would not tolerate a reprisal," he said.

Defendants who feel a judge has been racist need to tell that to their defense attorney, because the attorney will have the opportunity to evaluate the judge. The Judicial Evaluation Committee, established by UJS, sends forms to attorneys, judges, and court personnel asking for their input about the judicial system.

"It's like a checkup - what's the perception out there," Roberts said.

At Gilbertson's request, the Judicial Evaluation Committee has now added a question about racial tolerance to the judicial evaluation form, Roberts said.

Roberts is enthusiastic about the steps UJS has taken to address perceived inequities in the state's courts. "We are committed to making sure there is equality in our judicial system, and I think that is huge," she said. "I'm new, but it's been amazing to see the level of work done to assure that our judicial system is fair and unbiased."

After issuing his 2003 study, Braunstein, with USD Assistant Professor Amy Schweinle, conducted further examination of selected cases from the first study and published findings in the May 2005 South Dakota Law Review.

In the second study, Braunstein again concluded that race did not stand alone as a factor in sentencing decisions; he did find, however, that socioeconomic factors such as income, education, employment, and living arrangements influenced bond-setting, sentence length, and likelihood of probation or suspended impositions.

"It is the case that poor, under-educated and under-employed defendants of both races received harsher treatment than better situated defendants in the system," Braunstein wrote. "Further, it is the case that these factors have a disproportionate impact on American Indians in South Dakota criminal justice."

Look for further exploration of race and criminal justice in future issues of Lakota Country Times.

reauthorization and family and children issues and Paul Iron Cloud in Public Safety and Education components.

Paul Iron Cloud is representing John Steele's office in Minneapolis at a tribal justice meeting while Shorty Brewer and Mel Lone Hill are in Phoenix attending the National Indian Gaming Association conference and will, along with other Sioux tribes, meet with the Seminole Tribe of Florida on Class II gaming.

Last week President Steele was asked to testify before the Senate Select Committee on Indian Affairs, in particular about housing. During the testimony, John talked about overcrowding, lack of home repair, homelessness, lack of affordable housing for working people, home improvement funds, infrastructure development, new initiatives and the reauthorization of the Native American Housing Assistance and Self-Determination Act. While in Washington, John testified before the Senate Appropriations committee on funding for Oglala Sioux Rural Water Supply System, it looks good for a $9.1 million increase in Rural Water funding.

A swearing in ceremony for the Steele/Brewer administration was held on Dec. 5 at OLC's Piya Wiconi center with the possibility of an inauguration down the road. John has expressed interest in having something in each district and using that as a way to help the districts to work together while Shjorty has talked about doing inauguration ceremonies at the SuAnne Center east of Pine Ridge.

Bush in at Housing, Director's job advertised again

Ken Lone Elk's contract as executive director ended on Tuesday, March 27; the housing board decided to put Joy Bush in as acting director and re-advertise the director's position for 30 days.

"We have a monitoring report from HUD that we really have to deal with," said Eileen Janis, board member from Pine Ridge Village, "we really need better policies and procedures especially in the area of procurement and we need to improve the number of houses that we complete, both those renovated and the building of new homes."

Disagreements between the architects and sub-contactors have slowed down the completion of log home project, 27 home ownership houses and disagreements between board members and the board and executive director have slowed down the Ellsworth home project.

building was secure, Chief Red Crow would be available for comment.

Red Crow wrote, "A search of personnel and students was conducted in a non-intrusive manner by tribal officers and special agents. No weapons were found during the search and the school was cleared from the threat. Students and staff were then allowed to leave their classrooms."

A couple of students reportedly used their cell phones to call their parents and were noticeably anxious and upset at having to be confined in their classrooms.

The latest "lock down" at TCHS occurred just one day prior to the anniversary of the Red Lake high school in Minnesota where a student killed 10 people and injured 15 others before taking his own life.

The incident also further underscored the negative publicity that was generated previously when a USA Today article included TCHS in their list of the 30 most "persistently dangerous" schools in the nation. The article did note, however, that schools which consistently do a good job of reporting all incidences both minor and major are candidates for the list. Some larger schools which, in fact, are dangerous do not make the list because they fail to properly document all reports of bad behavior.

On March 21, Principal Victoria Sherman wrote a memorandum to parents and guardians in which she said, "No student or staff member will be allowed the use of a cell phone or email during an incident. Also should you call the high school office, no information will be released. You will simply be asked to leave your name and a contact number where you can be reached when and if information is released."

The whole "lockdown" scenario has to be a rather frightening experience for students who have experienced such a large number, however, the accompanying efforts to secure the building and make it safe for students and teachers make it a vitally important function. It is likely followed up with some form debriefing in order to not traumatize such young minds.

Spring basketball season in full swing

PINE RIDGE - The 19th annual BJ Weston Memorial Pee wee basketball tournament got underway on Monday in Pine Ridge using three different gyms and preparing for 64 teams from around the region in four divisions, 7-9 year olds, 10-12 year olds, 13-15 and for the first time a 16-18 division.

The annual tourney honors the memory of young BJ Weston who was killed by a drunk driver north of Wounded Knee. Bodie Weston, BJ's father, members of the Weston family, Sandy Cuny and a large group of volunteers help to coordinate the double elimination tournaments that will include 120 games over the seven days in Pine Ridge high school gym, Pine Ridge Middle school gym and Red Cloud high school gym with the champions scheduled on Sunday, April 1 in the Pine Ridge high school gym.

This past weekend, youth tournaments were held in Chadron, Neb., Rapid City and Spearfish with several local teams doing well.

The sixth grade Lakota All Stars won the sixth grade division of the Queen City Classic in Spearfish and the seventh grade division of the MDU/Bank West Classic in Rapid City and included Brook Pond, Shania Richard. Tasina Helper, Shalene Zimiga, Danielle Mesteth, Lexi Amiotte, Shalene Richard, Larae Morgan and Frances Around Him, coached by Ted Standing Soldier, Jr. The seventh grade Lakota All Stars won the Queen City Classic and included Alana Brown Bull, Morgan Brewer, Paige Provost, Sharae Brewer, Marissa Around Him, Shaina Mesteth, Kateri Means and Tiara Little with Standing Soldier, Jr. The fifth grade Little Saders won the MDU classic in Rapid City with Christy Sioux Bob, Terra Garnier, Savanna Jensen, Crystal Waters, Santana White Dress, Tia Slow Bear and Cassandra Blunt Horn, coached by Dawn Hernandez and Matt Rama.

In the Chadron Hoopshoot over the weekend, the boys eighth grade team, Mahpiya Luta won their division with. The Pine Ride eighth graders coached by Casey Means won the MDU Classic with a win over St. Thomas More on Sunday.

Little Wound honors Cavaliers in ceremony

RAPID CITY - On Monday, the Little Wound Mustangs traveled to St. Thomas More to honor the Cavaliers, State A champs. Coordinated by adults from both schools, Little Wound and St. Thomas More players had lunch together and then presented each other with gifts.

"We needed to bring some closure to the state championship game when our team left the floor and did not return for their awards," said Dana Brave Eagle, Little Wound principal, "we wanted to honor both the State A champs, the Cavaliers and the Lakota Nation champs the Mustangs and we wanted to let everyone know that it was not a players decision to not come back but an adult decision. The day turned out really well, Dave Hollenbeck and long time coach, Dave Strain expressed an interest in supporting us when we go before the state and their superintendent said he would write a letter of support, the exchange of gifts was really neat."

Little Wound wrapped each Cavalier in a star quilt while St. Thomas More presented each Mustang with a Native Pride cap and t-shirt. Dave and Chekpa Claymore sang an honoring song and a song of encouragement and St. Thomas More presented a drum and a lance made by Nathan Little Wounded. Floyd Brings Plenty, council representative from Oglala/Whiteclay District presented St. Thomas More with a tribal flag and words of encouragement.

St. Thomas More beat Little Wound 71-61 in the State A Championship on March 1`7 while Little Wound beat the Cavaliers 49-46 for the Lakota Nation championship back on Dec, 15. For St. Thomas More, it was their only blemish on a two year record of 51-1 with back to back state titles.

The $200 billion question for Alberto Gonzales

By Indianz.com Editorial
March 26, 2007

If U.S. Attorney General Alberto Gonzales still has his job by the end of the week, there's a big question Congress needs to ask him.

But it's not about his role in the latest scandal to grace Washington. Democrats, and even some Republicans, are calling for his head over the way the Bush administration fired several federal prosecutors who weren't loyal enough to the White House political machine.

This question is much more serious: How do you go from $200 billion in Indian trust fund liability to $7 billion in just two short years?

In March 2005, Gonzales went before a House committee to ask for more money to fight tribal trust fund lawsuits. At the time, about two dozen tribes had filed cases alleging mismanagement of their assets.

"The United States' potential exposure in these cases is more than $200 billion," he testified on March 1, 2005.

Two years later, more than 200 tribes have joined the crowded field. And the Native American Rights Fund lodged a class-action lawsuit on behalf of even more tribes who haven't been able to file a claim. Add the billion-dollar Cobell lawsuit over individual Indian trust funds and you have a rather big price tag. That's why Gonzales' credibility, already at stake in the U.S. Attorney dustup, faces further doubts after he and Interior Secretary Dirk Kempthorne on March 1, 2007, offered "up to" $7 billion to settle Cobell and all the tribal cases, plus pay for trust reform, in exchange for eliminating the federal government's "exposure."

So there it is again: How do you go from $200 billion in Indian trust fund liability on March 1, 2005, to $7 billion on March 1, 2007?

Hopefully, Sen. Byron Dorgan (D-North Dakota), the vice chairman of the Senate Indian Affairs Committee, will try to figure that out. He's called a hearing this Thursday to allow Gonzales and Kempthorne to "publicly discuss the origin of the settlement offer and to explain its details."

Given the political climate on Capitol Hill, it's likely Gonzales won't even appear before the committee. That means someone else from the administration will be giving the "no one did it" answers Indian Country that has heard for more than a century on every issue from trust to health care.

But even if Gonzales can't make the trip, that shouldn't stop the committee from asking tough questions about his role in the trust fund debacle. From the midnight rider in 2001 to the firing of former Special Trustee Tom Slonaker in 2002 to the time-out rider in 2003 to the ouster of two court investigators in 2004 to the removal campaign of Judge Lamberth in 2005 to the resistance of a settlement in 2006, the panel will find a trail that leads all the way to the president.

For the White House is where Gonzales got his start, as President Bush's top lawyer, before moving to the Department of Justice. One of his top aides at both places was Kyle Sampson, whose had his hands all over the trust fund since the start of the Bush administration in 2001 until he resigned two weeks ago, a mid-level casualty of the U.S. Attorney scandal.

Sampson is expected to spill the beans at another hearing this Thursday. Maybe Dorgan should schedule a session with him too so we can finally get some answers and get a real settlement to this mess.

Native youth not throw away kids and school-to-prison pipeline urgent challenge

Dear Editor:

Are native youth throw-away kids? The Rapid City Area Schools seems to think they are. For many years the Rapid City Area Schools has resisted change. Mona Bettelyoun says things are improving. We hope that is true but know that the extent of change must be very great and is needed immediately.

For more than 30 years the Title VII Indian Education Program has attempted to bring about changes. Those changes have been resisted and made very slowly, if at all. It has been one step forward and two steps back.

A remedies mediation team including Mary Wright and I negotiated an agreement with the district in the early 1980s. Part of that agreement was that the Indian Education director must become a part of the school district cabinet. The person currently filling that position is Dr. Art Zimiga. The district removed Zimiga this year and replaced him with a consulting team known as the Redstone Group.

Work groups were formed before the turn of the century to look at many changes needed in the RCAS. I served on a work group on the minority drop-out rate in 1979. A survey was designed, which in addition to the questions on the current survey asked students about their disciplinary record in school. Amazingly, the majority of students dropped out because of write ups in Central High School. They left the school instead of being sent to Juvenile Detention Center to become a part of the school-to-prison pipeline.

About five years ago there was a flurry of activity over the failure of Central High School to place Indians on sports teams and over the failure of the district to properly notify Indians of the talented and gifted program. The OCR of the Department of education found for parents in those complaints after the Rapid City school board denied their complaints. They made the district commit to a number of things, some of which have already gone by the wayside.

Several years ago the State of South Dakota finally appointed an Equal Justice Commission-most states did that more than 15 years earlier. That Commission held study groups in many communities and wrote a report from each study group.

About 20 years ago South Dakota was near the top of the list of states for over representation of minority youth in our criminal justice system. At that time they had about 45 percent of youth in the systems who were minority. It has only gotten worse since then.

In a report on Disproportionate Minority Contact, the Equal Justice Commission study group wrote a Rapid City/Pennington County Intervention Plan. Little, if any, of that intervention plan has been accomplished.

The report went through the percentage of Indian and all minority youth in the Criminal Justice System. They found, amazingly that there are less than 14 percent Indian youth in our population and about 17 percent in the all minority population.

In 2003 they found that 46 percent of Indians and 49 percent of all minority youth were arrested in the county and 53.5 percent of those arrested were for status offenses, not crimes if an adult. South Dakota now has the highest percent of persons, mostly Indian, in our system for status offenses.

More than 50 percent of Indian youth and 54 percent of all minority youth were detained in Pennington County and 852 youth were disposed of through probation in 2003. Of those 40 percent were native and all minorities represented 42 percent. Commitments to DOC were 60 percent native and 66 percent all minority youth.

Secure placement of youth were 63 percent native and 69 percent all minority youth. Secure temporary custody involved 71 percent native and 73 percent all minority youth. However revocation of probation occurred involving 72 percent of native youth.

The plan speaks extensively about the role of the schools in this. It says in a section entitled School Setting Improvement, the following"

"Schools must incorporate a more therapeutic school setting for those youth who are most at risk of failing, dropping out and becoming involved in the juvenile justice system. This includes creating positions for social workers within the school. …"

The plan was presented to the RCAS administration and other groups in Pennington County. According to the Human Resources Office, the Rapid City Schools employ two social workers. One is in special services stationed at Kibben Kuster and the second is at Valley View. No Caseworkers are at Central, North or Beadle, the schools most likely to contain the "high risk" students.

Valley View has only 25 percent minority and 41 percent low income following the transfer of many students from E.B. Bergquist several years ago. Beadle school has 72 percent

Finding My Voice

Youth identify with Hollywood

Dana Lone Hill

The youth of my reservation are lost.

I am sure they are not the only lost youth.

But the youth here are lost.

I wished I had the money to make a documentary on the youth here.

I see them "acting ghetto or gangster" like it's cool.

I see them identifying with other cultures.

It's bad enough drugs and alcohol reign so supreme, already.

But when Hollywood shows youth who are looking for an identity that it is tough to go around with a gun, shooting at people, or each other, it makes me sad that some of these kids had short lives and they don't know who they are, where they are from or what a great, strong people they belong to. They only identify with Hollywood.

Back when I wrote a blog about Wounded Knee, I did that for my children. I was writing all the time in a blogging community. I was literally attacked by a guy from Alabama for "living in the past."

Of course he not only attacked Indians on the reservations, he also attacked the Jewish saying they should forget the Holocaust, and Blacks telling them to forget slavery. I was very hurt, then I pulled my big girl panties up and went to word war with him. While some of the stuff I said was not very nice or does not need to be repeated because I can go off with my curse words at times...ok most of the time, but I was hit in the head with the realization that ignorance is still alive.

While I was trying to explain to him that history should be honored, he was saying history is garbage.

Then he had to be reminded that almost every holiday we have on our calendar is from a certain date in the history of someone, some people, somewhere. Anyway, he never "got it" and I chalked him up as ignorant and someone I would never want to meet.

I thought about what he said and I came to the conclusion that my children will always know about the past of our people. They will know of the massacres, the broken treaties, etc. At the same time, they will know what strong people we are.

That we endured, survived, and moved on. They will know this not to "cry around" about the past.

They will know this because it will show them as Lakota's they are capable of anything.

Dana Lone Hill is a 34-year old mother of 4, who recently moved back to the reservation, after an eternity on the housing waiting list. Although currently self-employed, she plans on continuing her education at the Oglala Lakota College.

Girls State A Basketball Tournament

Congratulations on your extremely successful 2006-07 basketball season. You should be very proud of your accomplishments.

Black Hills State University was pleased to serve as the host site of this year's tournament.

It was my pleasure to be able to attend many of the games. Athletes, you are to be complimented on your performance on and off the court.

Fans, your enthusiastic support of these fine young women was inspiring. Together, you were outstanding representatives of your school and community.

I hope you had a pleasant time in Spearfish and at the University.

Please consider BHSU as your University in the future!

Best wishes for a great spring.

Notes From Indian Country

Oh sovereignty, wherefore art thou?

By Tim Giago

(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

The quasi-sovereign status of the Indian nations of America has slowly eroded since the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act of 1988 became the law of the land. The Act made it mandatory for the Indian nations to sign gaming compacts with the state governments wherein their Indian reservations were situated. The tribes, from that day forward, began to surrender much of their status as sovereign nations.

The tribes would only be allowed to establish gaming that was already permissible under current state law. In other words, if slot machines were outlawed within the state, the tribes could not, without extra special permission, introduce slot machines into their casinos.

When South Dakota opened up nearly all forms of gambling for the City of Deadwood, it then opened up the same gaming opportunities for the Indian tribes in the state. However, while allowing the steady growth in the number of slot machines in Deadwood, the state gaming compact restricted the Indian nations to a total of 250 slot machines for each tribe (there are nine tribes in South Dakota). The Flandreau Santee Sioux Tribe of eastern South Dakota last week brought a lawsuit against Governor Mike Rounds and the state for greatly diminishing their efforts at economic growth by this restriction.

In New Mexico, in exchange for limited non-Indian competition, the tribes signed compacts that would pay the state no more than 8 percent of its slot machine revenues. These compacts expire in 2015. Seeking a long-term extension of those compacts in order to bring about stability and certainty to their gaming and tribal government operations, the tribes moved to establish new compacts with the state.

The new compacts would extend the gaming compacts to the year 2037. The state will receive a gradual gaming revenue sharing increase to 10.75 percent over the life of the new compacts. The state proposed that the tribes set aside an additional 1 percent of their slot revenues for infrastructure improvements on reservations within the state that do not have casinos. The tribes immediately rejected this proposal. Setting aside a small portion of their casino profits to help the less fortunate tribes in the state was apparently unthinkable.

The only businesses in America that considers losers and the addicted as their best friends and customers are the gaming casinos. And you can take that to the bank.

Charles J. Dorame, Chairman of the New Mexico Indian Gaming Association in an oped piece in the Albuquerque Journal, even bragged about the sovereignty the tribes of New Mexico are willingly and gladly surrendering to the state. He wrote, "The proposed compact amendment significantly increases the level of state oversight. For example, state gaming representatives would have access to expanded slot data and the slot machines themselves, to slot accounting systems and to raw, unadulterated data."

He then unabashedly threw sovereignty out of the window with, "The amendment also would require each tribal regulatory authority to submit an annual compliance report to the state and to maintain all records relied upon in preparing the compliance report for review by the state gaming representative. In addition the state would have the right to request any additional documentation and to conduct its own inspection of the Gaming Facility, Class III Gaming activity, individual gaming machines and all records related to the Class III Gaming of the Tribe." Phew! He could have turned over the keys to all of the bathrooms while he was at it.

I wrote an editorial for I*ndian Country Today* newspaper in 1989 when I was its editor and publisher that read, "Why are the tribes submitting to blackmail by the state governments that forces them to hand over their limited sovereignty in order to operate a gaming casino? They should proceed with whatever it takes to build their casinos, including an unlimited number of slot machines, and then tell the state government to go to hell if it questions their sovereign right to do so." I stand by that editorial even to this day. To stand in fear of state government and to sell out their sovereignty, limited though it may be, for a casino, is not only mindless, but also totally untraditional.

If it wasn't for the haste preceded by the greed that caused many Indian tribes to plunge into gaming pell-mell, they would have listened to the warnings of the great tribal leaders like Roger Jourdain of the Red Lake Band of Ojibwe in Minnesota and Wendell Chino, the fearless leader of the Mescalero Apache Tribe in New Mexico, who warned them from day one to take their time and to not surrender one more ounce of their sovereignty in order to get into the gambling business. Jourdain and Chino must be spinning in their graves to see tribe after tribe sell out their very souls to build another casino.

To see the tribes of New Mexico eroding and surrendering their sovereignty for 30 more years of state-regulated gaming is indeed a sad day in the history of Indian country and a harbinger of the predictions so sadly rendered by Jourdain and Chino.

AIHEC conference 25 years ago

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

With the 26th annual American Indian Higher Education Conference being held in Rapid City, it took me back 25 years ago when Orville Ringing Shield, Janis Herman and I were co-conference coordinators of the AIHEC conference when it was held in Rapid City in 1982.

It was funny because everything was done by hand then. The computer would have been a great advantage back then for everything from making name tags to keeping up to date lists of those pre-registered.

Tom Casey was making his mark even back then. I still have a conference booklet that he created. It is pink and yellow and was quite professionally done. It probably belongs in the AIHEC archives, but I'm hanging on to it for my own archives.

Casey also did a photographic collage using an overhead projector of the conference highlights with a lot of people shots. He put it to music and it was hit and for 1982 that was quite innovative. My sense of technology wasn't very advanced back then, so I was impressed that even film could be developed that quickly and put on slides.

It is ironic that Casey and I are still highlighting many of the issues which are confronting Lakota people, students, and society in general. Many of the issues remain and it is only the players who have changed.

Those in the forefront of Indian education at the time were educators like Lionel Bordeaux at Sinte Gleska University, Joe McDonald of Salish Kotenai Community College, Dave Gipp of United Tribes Technical Educational College, Gay Lawrence-Kingman of National Indian Education Association at the time, and Elgin Bad Wound of Oglala Lakota College to name just a few. Of course, I cannot ever forget Lowell Amiotte and the late Vine Deloria. There were many other tribal college administrators that I worked with over the telephone and as an AIHEC staffer I recall that many were very kind and congenial.

Who knew that tribal colleges would represent such hope and success for those who would take advantage of the locale and tremendous bargain.

Having gotten my start in education at SGU dating back to the spring of 1977, I was witness to the tribal college movement's slow evolution and it is amazing to see the way in which some of the infrastructure has ballooned up over the years.

I recall coming through the Blackfoot reservation in the mid 1980s in northern Montana and stopping in at their tribal college. I think Carole Juneau was the president at the time. If I recall correctly, their college was housed in a couple of mobile homes. I also did a site evaluation of Turtle Mountain Community College for the North Central Association in 1986 and at the time it was nestled in between three bars downtown. I have seen pictures of TMCC and apparently they now have a beautiful campus.

Well anyway, so much of my recollection of tribal colleges. I guess I may have forgotten more than some may have gained about the early years. I remember Lionel explaining to me PL 471 funding on a blackboard at the old SGU building. It was an old brick building that apparently was the old Rosebud Sioux tribal headquarters and one could see the site of Chief Spotted Tail's house if you looked south.

I hope that tribal colleges have increased their Native staff as that one was one of my pet peeves. Native people need to be in charge of their own destiny and that means serving as role models in those institutions that serve their own people.

Congratulations also to students from Sinte Gleska University for winning the Knowledge Bowl at this years AIHEC.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) resides on the Rosebud with his son, Beaux. He earned a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) from Harvard University. A decorated Vietnam Veteran, he is functionally literate in Lakota and worked at Sinte Gleska University for 20 years as Dean/Chair of Tribal and Graduate Studies.

minority and an astounding 92 percent low income students this year.

North has 64 percent minority and 83 percent low income students and Central has 22 percent minority and 24 percent low income. Central, however lost 242 students from the end of September to the meal count data for February.

It is believed that most of these students are Indian dropouts and only 79 are attending the Academies.

In a report of the NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund entitled Dismantling the School-to-prison Pipeline they state:

"Criminal justice policy in the United States has for some time now spurned rehabilitation in favor of long and often permanent terms of incarceration, manifesting an overarching belief that there is no need to address root causes of crime and that many people who have committed crimes can never be anything but "criminals." These policies have served to isolate and remove a massive number of people, a disproportionately large percentage of whom are people of color, from their communities and from participation in civil Society.

Historical inequities, such as segregated education, concentrated poverty, and racial disparities in law enforcement, all feed the pipeline.

The School-to-Prison Pipeline is one of the most urgent challenges in education today."

We must dismantle the school-to-prison pipeline flowing from our public schools in Rapid City, South Dakota. Our brown-skinned children are not disposable-they are sacred.

BLACK HILLS - Lakota people have reclaimed their identity by observing the spring equinox when the "thunder beings" have returned to renew the earth with its coming spring rains. The site near present day Custer is called Hinhan Kaga Paha where people gather and offer tobacco and prayers to welcome the renewal. Despite the distance many Lakota traditionally journeyed to the sacred He Sapa as their movement was in accordance with the location of the constellations. In the days of old long before contact with western civilization one can almost visualize the movement of the various Lakota nations as they enjoyed all that they needed right in their backyard and lived in the center of their universe requiring little travel.

It is a spiritual calendar which Lakota people attend to as they also traveled to other locations in the sacred He Sapa. Pe Sla is a place near Hill City where spiritual offerings are made in May to the animal and bird nation. Inyan Kaga is a place near Sundance, WY where Lakota people would converge and gather rocks for the annual sun dance. The summer solstice is associated with Pte He Hota or Devil's Tower during which time Lakota people would make offerings for the sun dance. This happened during late June during the summer solstice. Finally, Mato Paha or Bear Butte was a place for planning for the coming year and often occurred in September.

Senators sponsor medals of honor for Woodrow Keeble

"He was shot in the shoulder, but refused to leave until the fight was over and the enemy had been repulsed. For his action he was awarded the Bronze Star and Purple Heart."

WASHINGTON (AP) - Senators from North Dakota and South Dakota say they have introduced legislation to award the Medal of Honor to the late Woodrow Wilson Keeble, a member of the Sisseton-Wahpeton Sioux tribe who fought in World War II and the Korean War.

Sens. Byron Dorgan and Kent Conrad, D-N.D., said in a statement Tuesday that the Pentagon has told them the deadline expired for the president to award the nation's highest military honor to Keeble without specific authorization from Congress.

They said their bill, co-sponsored by Sens. Tim Johnson, D-S.D., and John Thune, R-S.D., would make clear the president has the authority to approve the award for Keeble.

He would be the first Sioux Indian to receive the Medal of Honor.

Keeble, who was known as Chief, is credited with saving his fellow soldiers' lives in 1951, during the Korean War, while he was wounded.

Woody Keeble saw extensive action in World War II and the Korean conflict, and his extraordinary bravery should soon be reflected with a Medal of Honor, even though he died in 1982.

Woodrow Wilson Keeble was born May 16, 1917, near Waubay in northeastern South Dakota.

His parents, Isaac and Nancy Keeble, were members of the Sisseton-Wahpeton Oyate (Sioux) tribe.

Keeble was a good student and an outstanding athlete. He enjoyed writing poetry and reading, and also played football, basketball and baseball. As the star hurler for the Wahpeton amateur baseball team, he reportedly could throw a fastball 100 mph and was scouted by the Chicago White Sox.

When the U.S. entered World War II, Keeble enlisted and in 1942 was assigned to the 164th Infantry, which was sent to the South Pacific. He saw his first action at Guadalcanal in the Solomon Islands. The enemy shelled Keeble's position, killing many soldiers, and then continued their assault by rushing toward his unit. Keeble jumped up with his machine gun and began firing back. He was shot in the shoulder, but refused to leave until the fight was over and the enemy had been repulsed. For his action, he was awarded the Bronze Star and Purple Heart."

Red Cloud Indian School: pennies a gift that keeps giving

PINE RIDGE - Pennies for Patients is an organization that raises money for cancer research.

It runs during the months of January and February. Sister Susan Biegert, SND at Our Lady of Lourdes Elementary School began the fund raising with a kickoff campaign assembly in the gym. This year the student council helped Sr. Susan. One of the students dressed up like a penny and tried to fit into one of the jars that each class gets for collecting pennies. When he did not fit into any of the jars she told the students that it takes all of us to fill up the jars. Then the student council members passed out the jars and posted the Pennies for Patients' posters in the halls and the collecting began.

The amount last year was $940 so Sr. Susan told the school that this year "I wanted to raise $1,200." Everyday Sr. Susan would come by the rooms with her little penny markers. If they brought a dollar she wrote their name on the markers and post them in the hall. Let me tell you the hall was getting full of penny markers and on those jars! The pennies were bursting to come out of the top.

Are filling jars the only way to collect pennies? What can the students do to really promote the efforts? Several teachers had ideas for fundraisers and that really helped the Pennies for Patients cause.

Two Red Cloud Indian School students and part of the cash they collected for Pennies for Patients.

The third grade class had a cake raffle and was that a delicious hit. Those 25 cent raffle tickets were going like hotcakes. They made a nice little sum of money and "cha-ching" the money amount climbed higher.

The sixth grade class joined Sr. Susan in doing concessions at basketball games and had a sale of their own and again the pennies kept rising.

Eighth grade had a basketball free throw contest and who doesn't like basketball? "All I can say is, We're in the money!"

Fifth grade did a pancake supper one Friday evening and that really brought in the dollars as you can see by the two boys in the picture and their smiles. You can also see by the pictures how much fun the kids are having and that the people are really enjoying the delicious meal. They even provided entertainment for the little kids if they finished eating early before the parents.

The compassion part of the whole Pennies for Patients is that two of the classes donated all of their pennies to another class whose teacher has cancer.

Usually the winning class gets a pizza party, but these two classes did not think of themselves but gave to this class. This action of the students is very commendable. Sr. Susan is very proud of their generosity. "They are living the mission of Our Lady of Lourdes."

Last year Our Lady of Lourdes came in sixth in the state. This year Sr. Susan is proud to announce that Our Lady of Lourdes raised $1,831.50 and came in SECOND in the state. "I am already thinking and have plans on my goal for next year - $2008 - the year itself."

Our Lady of Lourdes elementary wants to thank all the parents, teachers, staff, and especially, the students, who worked so hard to bring in all those pennies. It paid off. "Our Lady of Lourdes may not have reached number one in the state but the students are number one to me." Said Sr. Susan.

Pine Ridge Hospital offers new procedure for heavy menstrual bleeding

PINE RIDGE - It is estimated that one in five women in the United States suffer from severe menstrual bleeding or Menorrhagia.

Women with this condition often experience fatigue, anemia, embarrassing accidents, restricted activity and possibly major surgery. Now, an advanced minimally-invasive surgical procedure available at Pine Ridge Hospital provides a safe and effective treatment option for Menorrhagia without many of the side effects and long-term risks associated with other treatment methods.

Hysteroscopic Endomtrial Ablation is an FDA approved alternative to hysterectomy for the treatment of excessive bleeding. Resctoscopy uses a slender electrode to emit precisely measured amounts of electric energy.

HEA is usually performed as an outpatient procedure. The patient goes home the same day as the procedure.

"We can precisely target the area causing heavy bleeding, without having to do a major operation." says Dr. Moise Mamouzette, obstetrician/gynecologist with Pine Ridge. He said the the National Uterine Fibroids Foundation states, "Hysterectomy is certainly a treatment option. It isn't, necessarily, your only option."

"Endometrial ablation is a common surgical procedure used for many years to remove the lining inside the uterus (endometrium) to reduce bleeding," explains Dr. Mamouzette "Today; however, there is a new generation of medical technology that enables us to perform this. This offers several advantages over other treatment methods."

By using hysteroscopic endometrial ablation to remove the uterine lining, the procedure leaves no scars and can usually be performed in less than one hour in an outpatient setting. Recovery time is very short, with most patients returning to normal activities in a few days.

"For women suffering from heavy menstrual bleeding, this is a real breakthrough," Dr. Mamouzette added.

"Most women will see a significant reduction in their menstrual bleeding and some will stop bleeding altogether." Studies show that over 60 percent of women treated with this procedure also report a decrease in dys-

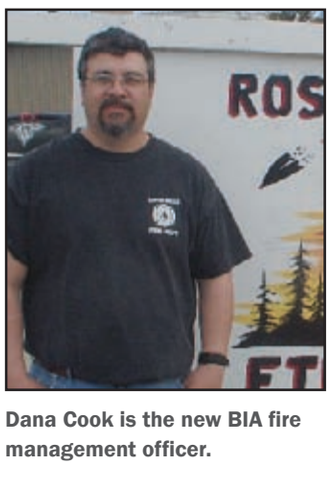
Rosebud is one of the best in the nation at fighting Wildland range fires

Dana Cook is new Rosebud Fire Management Officer



By Archie B. Beauvais and Beaux Beauvais
Special to the Times

ROSEBUD - Dana Cook, a Minnecojou Lakota, from the Cheyenne River reservation is the new Bureau of Indian Affairs Fire Management Officer at Rosebud.

One of his first impressions is that "Rosebud is a very elite at fighting range wild land fires and always has been."

Cook was discharged from the U. S. Marines in 1989 and in 1991 he met a Native American on the Plumas National Forest who offered to train him in the initial attack of wild land fires. He then moved to the Tahoe National Forest where he "marked" timber for thinning and removal. He fought many fires with a project hand crew and with a wild land type 3 and 4 engines until 1995.

In 1995 Cook took the Joint Apprenticeship Training Academy in Northern California and then became a permanent employee with the U. S. Forest Service. He was also a squad boss with the Tahoe Hotshots and became crew boss qualified in the Tahoe National Forest and received additional training, including some college coursework including a fire science course at Feather River College in Quincy, CA.

Dana Cook is the new BIA fire management officer.

In 1999 he joined the Tatanka Hotshots of the United States Forest Service in their inaugural season. He noted that the "Hotshots" trained at a vigorous pace and placed a high premium on physical fitness, and he elected to step down and soon after became the first dispatcher in the Great Plains region.

Cook then returned to Northern California on the Round Valley Indian reservation and got in to prevention work which involved writing fire permits, educating children, and doing fire inventory. He also was later engaged in fuel reduction work at Ft. Bidwell, CA. where he managed a five person fuels crew.

Later in 2006 he earned college credits in upper and lower division courses in biological sciences at the University of Nevada-Las Vegas and continued to pursue a professional services track leading to a managerial position. Non managerial firefighters are considered in the technical services track. Cook, as a GS-11 rated fire management officer, has the opportunity to upgrade his

Wanted fugitive fatally shot by Rosebud tribal police officers

ROSEBUD - Last Saturday, March 24, Rosebud Law Enforcement Services officers responded to a 9-1-1 call in the southwestern portion of the Rosebud at approximately 10 a.m. Escaped convict and transient male, Bruce Shifford Kale, IV, 26, of Missouri allegedly had come from the south by way of Kilgore, Neb. He had stolen gas from a station in Cody, Neb. according to a press release from Police Chief Charles Red Crow of the Rosebud Police department and had been pursued 50 miles by the owner who contacted tribal police officers.

Residents from the area reported after the fact, that a stranger had been in the Spring Creek area and was attempting to enter a house but was unsuccessful.

An FBI investigation is currently underway and menorrheal, painful menstruation. and symptoms associated with premenstrual syndrome.

During the ablation procedure, a slender electrode is inserted through the cervix into the uterus.

The electrode emits electrical energy into the uterus. After the procedure the electrode is removed from the uterus. This usually reduces or eliminates menstrual bleeding.

"Hysteroscopic endometrial ablation is quick, simple, safe and highly effective, especially for women who may not have responded to other treatment methods to control heavy bleeding," Dr. Mamouzette continued. Heavy menstrual bleeding is described as bleeding that lasts seven or more days per cycle or is so excessive that women need to change feminine protection products nearly every hour. Other treatment options for Menorrhagia include:

*Drug therapy, which is usually only effective 50 percent of the time, may cause undesirable side effects, and must be continued to remain effective;

*Dilation and curettage, which involves the scraping of the inside of the uterus, but may only be effective for a few menstrual cycles;

*Hysterectomy, which is a major surgical procedure requiring a hospital stay.

While highly effective, endometrial ablation may not be right for everyone. "Because this procedure changes the uterine environment, it is not recommended for women who wish to have children," skills and most often the training is rigorous.

Dr. Mamouzette explained. "It's best for women to consult with their OB-GYN to see if this procedure is right for them."

Apparently, wildland firefighters such as those he supervises are qualified as "first responders" and their role is to control and stabilize the situations. At Rosebud there are presently four engine modules and enough firefighters "on call" to make up four hand crews consisting of 20 firefighters each. At one time Rosebud was able to field 10 hand crews and had a reputation as one of best in the nation.

"The wild land crew here is very aggressive on the ground. Rosebud has giving me an excellent opportunity and I feel very fortunate to be here. Cook said as he enjoys his second week on the job.

Previous to Cook's arrival Gene Emery served as the acting FMO and with a new FMO he continues to serve as a Fire Operations Specialist and Incident Commander.

Residents of Valentine, Nebraska still speak of the potentially disastrous fire last summer that burned the north edge of their town. A faulty power station apparently was the source of the burn and when two units from Rosebud rolled into town the people were happy that they specialized in fighting range fires. Positive comments can still be occasionally heard about the night the Rosebud firefighters made a significant impact on extinguishing the blaze.

according to department policy and procedures the officers involved were put on administrative leave pending the outcome of a review of the shooting.

The pickup driven by the suspect had gotten stuck in a ravine and the station owner confronted him and asked him to contact local authorities.

He refused and pulled out a gun. As officers arrived they followed the suspect to a hill at which time he turned and faced the officers. He was told to lie on the ground, but instead pulled up his weapon in the direction of the officers and he was fatally wounded. The officers administered first aid to the suspect but were unsuccessful.

According to Red Crow, special agents determined that the fugitive had other weapons and that the pickup was, in fact, stolen from Wheeling, Montana. Prior to the officers arriving on scene, they were given information that the fugitive was from Missouri and was possibly armed and dangerous.

He was wanted for murder in Missouri.

ASK ANNA

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I have been reading your column in the Lakota Country Times for several months. Your advice and direction is indeed very helpful to others.

I am asking these questions of you. For two years I have known that I am to be making a significant move to another area. What area and state will I be moving? How much longer before I move? I have seen my community pipe in a vision. Who will be bringing it to me?

How long before I receive it? There are specific ceremonies I want to complete. These will help guide me on my path I have chosen to follow. Will I complete them and when? Will I continue to walk this path alone without a spiritual man as my companion? Will my specific health issues be resolved and improve? Eagerly awaiting your response. Thank you for taking the time to answer and direct me on my spiritual path!

Community Healer

Dear Community Healer:

I see Colorado - near and around Denver area. There will be further chances to move again; probably to the high dessert country in Arizona/New Mexico.

I am glad that you have had the dream of the Pipe. That information would be best coming from an Interpreter Man (medicine man). The Spirits will be communicating with him where/when/ and the homblacia (vision quest) attached to your dream.

The completion of your ceremonies (including for your health) will happen prior to your moving. It feels to me that all of these things take at least through the end of this summer to complete.

It "looks" to me though, that you will be moving when the snow is flying - so perhaps next winter?

Your journey is one of honor and so all will be provided for your preparation. Everything that needs to happen for you to being your work will be allowed. The biggest challenge is the "rush" that we as human beings try to get into when we know we are facing the challenges of a new direction. Patience is a lot easier to order someone to have than they realize. Like most of us though, you have no choice but to develop them (patience).

I see a successful journey - and I see you helping many people in the future. I see you working with people and helping bring them back to a close spiritual and Source connection.

I see your health improving with ceremony, other healing work and conscientious diet awareness.

Barb A., my business partner, and I would be happy to work with you on your health (we employ a method we call Balance Point Healing). Call the Lakota Country Times and leave your number; we will contact you.

Prayers and Blessings to you.

Dear Anna,

I haven't written to you in some time now so I thought I'd write you again.

I hope you are doing fine, as for me I'm somewhat okay but not really. I really don't know how I make it through each and every day because I just feel like something is going to happen and I don't know what.

I guess maybe you can clue me in on that (maybe?) well any ways, there are a few things that I'd like to share with you: My daughter did get out of jail but she don't want to straighten up, can you give me any kind of advice?

She was looking at prison time but she got probation and I thought that maybe she would like to start living a better life but she went right back into doing the same thing as usual. I don't know maybe I'm just feeling depressed but sometimes I just feel like giving up and I haven't prayed to my higher power in a long time, maybe that's what I should start doing.

Can you give me any ideas on how my life will be in the near future? My DOB is 08/24/1963. Do you see my aunt who got in a car accident back in Oct 2006 getting any better? My cousin died in that accident. I'm trying to go back to school in Denver, Colo.

Do you think that will work out for me? Also I'm having some major financial problems do you think I will get though this mess? I'm working on it but it just seems like its never gonna stop. well enough about all my problems.

Worried about everything

Dear Worried about everything:

In basic numerology you are a "six." People that are the number six generally are people that tend to accumulate things and are generally very physically oriented (this does not mean athletic, it means concerned more with things like houses, cars, the appearance of a good job, public image, etc.).

Their challenge is to learn to let go and let be, especially of old junk and grudges.Sixes like to hold a grudge - they are comfortable with them because they use it to create a self image of superiority.

A person that is a six will eventually accumulate all of the physical things they need and require to feel successful. A person that is a six needs to remember the Spirit and the Body - not just the mind. They are challenged with finding that balance. A person that is a six usually has good intellect and is very practical and concerned with financial solvency more than any other aspect of their life.

Your aunt is recovering - it is her heart (spirit) that is broken She has quite a journey in front of her to recover her balance - and she is not quite sure that she wants to. I see her as finding an easier road for herself; one of being helped and helping others.

Your daughter has not made a personal decision to live her life any way other than how she is living hers. She is in addiction and has to find the desire to create a different relationship with her self image than she has right now. Quite honestly she enjoys her addictions and has not suffered enough to really feel the damage that ownership by drugs and alcohol create. So far, she has been bailed out of all of her trouble so that the only worry has been by others that are so very nicely taking care of her (ennoblement). She will eventually find treatment and a better life - but her journey to wellness at this point, includes some real harsh happenings in her future. Quite simply, either she finds sobriety through treatment or prison. It is up to her.

Don't worry mom. Do pray - it softens impact and alters the future. Don't take your daughter's choices as a sign that you are not a good parent.

The influences of our children's world (peer pressure) has more determination over our children combined with social influence (television, music, movies) than any parent ever had. Very good parents have children that make very poor decisions.

Dear Anna,

How are you doing? I hope all is well. Today I am writing about my possibilities of having a child. I guess I want to know is can I have children, is it me with the problem or my significant other because there is no lack in trying and if I can is it going to be within this year or soon anyways I am concerned.

Concerned

Dear Concerned:

Yes, you can have children. I see a little boy being born, with a pregnancy probably this fall. Quit worrying and things will move along better - so to speak.

Dear Anna,

What do you know about breech babies? My baby is breech and I may have to have a c-section if it doesn't work out to have a normal delivery. I asked the doctor what causes a breech baby and he couldn't specifically tell me. Why is my baby breech?

Curious

Dear Curious:

Breech babies - well they are placed backwards in the womb. Their is risk to the mother and to the baby's back, limbs, etc. if they make their entrance to the world in the back wards way. Why are some babies breech?

Well, I don't know but when I ask Spirit why I was told: Some people are stubborn and begin their introduction to the Earth by not listening to directions. All babies are born out of a need to be here but those in the breech position are some of the most stubborn of people. They are survivors.

The baby can turn before birth. If not, a C-Section is not all that horrible. I delivered both my children in that way due to "conflicts" in presentation, such as the breech birth above (and the enormous size of my boys).

I recovered quickly, cleanly and was back in my size ten pants way quicker than my other young birth mother friends.

Pray for your child to turn. It is possible within prayer that this can happen. I will also pray and send you healing energy so the child may turn.

Good Luck and God Bless!

The Collaborative Circle For the Well-Being of South Dakota's Native Children (The Circle)

Is seeking an Independent Contractor who is an enrolled member of a federally recognized South Dakota tribe, to assist in the growth and advancement of The Circle. The Circle is a partnership of the nine Sioux tribes of South Dakota, the South Dakota Department of Social Services/Division of Child Protection Services, Native American family members, and child welfare providers from across South Dakota. The payment for the scope of work is competitive and sufficient to compensate for benefits. The Independent Contractor is not an employee of the The Circle.

This is a year contract which may be renewed on an annual basis if funding permits. The Independent Contractor will support the work of the members and assist in the creation of regional collaborative groups throughout the state. The Independent Contractor must be motiviated, proactive, and organized. Interested individuals should have knowledge of the nine South Dakota tribes, and experience in child welfare and community organizing.

Applicants should also have strong leadership, interpersonal, writing, analysis, and budget skills. Preference will be given to candidates with knowledge of and experience with The Circle. In-state travel will be required and applicants must have reliable transportation. Interested and qualified individuals should send a cover letter and resume, including three business related references, postmarked by March 31, 2007, to:

Susan Dubray

Shannon County Commissioners Special Session March 16, 2007

The Shannon County Board of Commissioners met in Special Session on March 16th, 2007 for the purpose of Sheriff applications and final Legislative Audit results. Present Deb Rooks-Cook, Tom Conroy, Vanessa Roubideaux and Patricia J. Seegrist, Deputy Auditor. Absent Connie Whirlwind Horse and Inez White Hawk.

Meeting called to order by Deb Rooks-Cook, time being 10:28 a.m.

Present was Jane Colhoff, Judy Merdanian, Dian Keester, Russell Merdanian, David Keester, Twila Merrill, Lee Ann Keester and Lynn Bettelyoun.

Questions were immediately asked why applications were not being discussed in open session, why the Commissioners wanted Executive session to do this. These questions were asked by Jane Colhoff and Judy Merdanian.

Judy said she thought Jim Daggett was doing a wonderful job and unless it was made public about any complaints on him she didn't understand why Daggett wasn't being kept on as Shannon County Sheriff.

Tom Conroy reported Jim Daggett had done a Drug bust in Colorado with the FBI and DCI; which was above and beyond his normal duties and he thought this was an asset to Daggett.

Jane Colhoff stated the Commission needed to state its reasons as to why the positions in Shannon County needed to be advertised, and specifically wanted to know why Jim Daggett was being run out of a job when he was doing so well and hadn't said anything about wanting to leave.

Deb Rooks-Cook stated Jim Daggett had lied about needing 3 phones and not having tribal police back up. That Protection Orders were not served and Cook said Daggett was too expensive to keep.

Jane said the Commissioner's did not take any action on these issues at any time and that these issues could not be used against him.

Tom Conroy said that gas prices are up and no on should put his life on the line everyday for $15,000.00 a year, so wages were increased. One phone had been cancelled. Conroy states he had no problems with Daggett, spoke highly of Daggett and how he had worked to get a relationship with Public Safety. Conroy said Daggett had told him he was working on his off time for Hermosa and he thought this was not the Commissioners business how Daggett spent his off hours.

Connie Whirlwind Horse now present, time being 10:45 a.m.

Jane Colhoff spoke that it isn't against the law to have an off duty job.

Inez White Hawk present time being 10:45 a.m.

Russell Merdanian spoke that he was broke down along side of the road, when it was cold and that Daggett had stopped on his own time with his family and tried to help him and when they couldn't get his car running Daggett took him home. He said not many people do that for you.

Lee Ann Keester spoke about her daughter being severely beaten and Jim Daggett came on the week-end, to help with the situation. Said no on else she had called would even come.

Judy Merdanian asked again why the positions were advertised.

Deb Rooks-Cook stated that they have found out positions for Veteran's Service Officer, Highway Superintendent, Coroner and Sheriff could by law be advertised, so they had decided to do so.

Jane Colhoff spoke again about 4 year terms of these offices, and that Jim Daggett was on 6th year, so shouldn't be up for 2 more years.

Deb Rooks-Cook made motion to go into executive session, seconded by White Hawk, for applicant's background checks which are not for public open session. Time being 11:07 a.m. All voting yes, the motion carried.

Meeting resumed at 11:13 a.m.

Jane Cohloff stated that no other business could be discussed at the Special meeting.

Connie Whirlwind Horse told the people that Lance Russell, States Attorney, would be doing background check on the new applicant.

Judy Merdanian stated she thought those applicants not here for interview should be disqualified and stop wasting the tax payers money and time.

Tom Conroy made a motion to retain Jim Daggett as Shannon County Sheriff. Discussion was held, with Connie stating that Jim Daggett has worked 34 years and usually at 30 years most law enforcement retire. Conroy stated salary has to stay the same, but might need to work on expenses.

Motion was then seconded by Roubideaux. Vote taken Conroy and Roubideaux voting yes, Rooks-Cook, Whirlwind Horse and White Hawk voting no.

Judy Merdanian wanted to know that since the motion had died, then what would be done if the Commissioners did not make a decision today on a Sheriff, and why should money be spent waiting for the next meeting.

Jane Colhoff said the way the motion was made that Shannon County did not have a Sheriff until the matter is resolved.

Judy Merdanian said lets look at applicants and a decision be made today on the best qualified.

Jeff Not Help Him still had not shown up for appointment at 11:30 a.m.

Motion by Rooks-Cook, seconded by Conroy to keep Jim Daggett on as Shannon County Sheriff till April 6th, 2007, until Lance Russell, States Attorney has time to do background check on new applicant. Voting yes, Rooks-Cook, Conroy and Roubideaux, Voting no, Whirlwind Horse and White Hawk. Motion carried.

David Keester stated that one of the Commissioners should step down because of conflict issues on the Sheriff position. This was denied as Commissioner Rooks-Cook said it was not on the agenda.

Jeff Not Help Him was present at this time, time being 11:34 a.m.

Judy Merdanian asked if Jeff Not Help Him was the most qualified person for the Sheriff's job, or was Jim Daggett.

Lance Russell was present at this time and stated that statement on who was the most qualified person could not be made at this time.

Judy Merdanian stated she was a taxpayer and she wanted the most qualified person for Sheriff.

Russell said conflicts could be presented and he would look at the issues by the next meeting.

David Keester stated that Inez White Hawk has conflicts with Jim Daggett and should step down.

Russell said he would need documentation on conflicts to go through before the next meeting.

Connie Whirlwind Horse stated she had received an accusing letter in the mail, which she stated was caused by the letter put in the Rapid City Journal.

Jane Colhoff stated Jim Daggett did not do the letter in the Rapid City Journal, that she had put it in.

Connie Whirlwind Horse stated Jim Daggett had refused to do an investigation on the Pop Machine in the Highway Shop, and had an issue on some bulls that were stolen.

Jane Colhoff said she wanted to know what proof Connie had and Connie said that was what she was told.

Lynn Bettelyoun, Highway Superintendent spoke and said she had asked Jim Daggett to come to the Highway Shop and take pictures and investigate, but that he did not do so. Lynn said she took pictures.

Jim Daggett then stated he went to the highway shop and that he had contacted the BIA as employees were tribal members and he could not make any arrests or anything on tribal members. Said he needed a list of stolen property and that beer should not have been removed from pop machine, and that he should have been called immediately to investigate.

Deborah Rooks-Cook stated that a decision would be made on April 6th, 2007.

It was then decided that the agenda had not been approved and Tom Conroy made a motion to adjourn meeting.

Jane Colhoff said again that nothing could be discussed except the Sheriff Position.

Lance Russell stated that the Agenda could be changed and items added as long as the agenda was posted 24 hours prior to the meeting.

Deborah Rooks withdrew motion to adjourn.

Motion by Rooks-Cook, seconded by Roubideaux to approve the agenda as read. All voting yes, the motion carried.

Judy Merdanian, asked the Commissioners that if the audience now left if there would be no further discussion's on the Sheriff position.

Al Schaefer, Department of Legislative Audit met with the Board to discuss the final findings on the 2004-2005 Audit. Gave each Commissioner a copy and discussion was held on several points. The findings are set unless something else comes up for review.

Motion by Conroy, seconded by Rooks-Cook to accept the Legislative Audit Report as submitted. All voting yes, the motion carried.

Lynn Bettelyoun, Highway Superintendent presented information on road that should be made into a T so you come to a complete stop and that the road needs to be 6 inches of gravel, so it needs to be taken back to the State. Also stated the signing and road project needs to be done in order, signing project after the road project.

Discussed Road Grader Repair which is estimated at $14,000.00 to $15,000.00, and the repair of the Tractors which is estimated at $5,000.00.

Motion by Rooks-Cook, seconded by Conroy to approve repairs on the road grader.

Motion by Rooks-Cook, seconded by Conroy to approve repairs for both tractors. All voting yes, the motion carried.

Commissioners told Bettelyoun to check Federal Surplus to get prices on a Back-Hoe.

Motion by Rooks-Cook, seconded by White Hawk to approve the following bills. All voting yes, the motion carried.

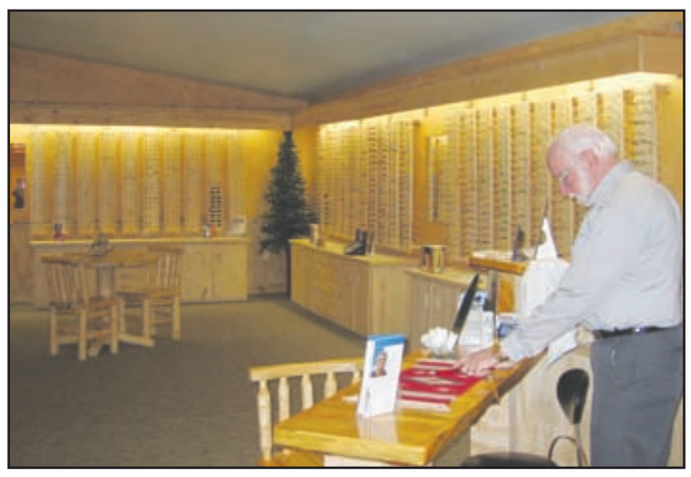
Pine Ridge Vision Center moves to new building, provides more services



By Connie Blanco
Times Staff

PINE RIDGE - Since 2003, The Pine Ridge Vision Center has grown from adjusting glasses, screening, and giving away free lens cleaner at a table at the back of Big Bat's to a full blown vision practice in a brand new building in Pine Ridge.

Dr. Vernon C. Rockey, administrative director of Pine Ridge Vision Center, fully expects the center to carry the major patient load of their three visions centers. Even now they have a full appointment book everyday.

The other vision centers are located in Chadron and Gordon, Neb.

He also credits the Indian Health Center with their successful welcome into the Pine Ridge area. "In the beginning IHS welcomed our 300 frame dispensary as they were writing so many prescriptions that had to be filled somewhere, so why not right in Pine Ridge," he said. Once the dispensary opened, five to six people a day wanted eye exams and Dr. Rockey began to pursue a lease on land for the Vision Center. The lease was obtained after two years and "many hurdles" and the building broke ground in the summer of 2006.

The 4,400 square foot structure also houses two rental suites occupied by Alltel Wireless and University of Colorado with separate footage of 1,575 and 1000 square feet.

"We decided if we were ever able to build we wanted the building to have all the frills that we had ever want-

KILI Radio on full throttle

PORCUPINE BUTTE - The long wait is over, KILI Radio's engineer hooked up the new analog transmitter on Tuesday, April 3, and KILI Radio was back on the air.

"It's not like we haven't been on the air, it's just that for many months we have been relying on the Internet and a temporary antenna, placed halfway up KILI's 300 foot tower, with an exciter and a 300 watt amplifier that generated all of 250 watts of power as compared to 100,000 watts," said Melanie Janis, station manager after the transmitter was hooked up, "we never knew, with any certainty, how many people could get us on any given day depending on the weather or geography; it is so good to be back

Black Feather wins $212,000 award in Pennington County court

RAPID CITY - On March 28 a Pennington County court awarded Robert Black Feather of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe $212,000 based upon a suit filed in 2000 against Prairie Bottle Market, Nash-Finch, Inc. and several Nash-Finch employees for an incident which happened in 2000.

After a five hour deliberation the all-white jury made the award in favor of Black Feather unanimously for inflicting battery and emotional stress.

The jury then all shook hands with Black Feather at the conclusion of the trial, which had been dismissed by the state's attorney.

A videotape of the incident had been in operation at the liquor store, but it disappeared and was never turned over to the police or to Black Feather's attorney.

When asked what Lakota people can do when confronted with such treatment by businesses in border towns, Attorney Charles Abourezk said, "Lakota people know about places and can vote with their pocket books. They can choose not to do business with them and socially it will make change. Robert Black Feather is an example of what happens when you know you are right and it takes persistence. It's really important to hang in there until the end."

Abourezk, who represented Black Feather recounted events leading up to the nightmare event. On Sept. 30, 2000 Robert and his family were in Rapid City to purchase a steam cleaner at the Rushmore Mall. Black Feather then went into the Prairie Bottle Market which sells bottled liquor.

He was there to buy a bottle of rum as an offering and in honor of his mother, who had died in 1991. There was a female employee behind the counter with a male next to her.

The female was apparently staring at Black Feather and when he brought his intended purchases to the counter she said, 'You're drunk and I'm not going to sell you the rum."

Black Feather then proceeded to purchase a pack of cigarettes instead. The female clerk again said, "You're drunk" and grabbed the cigarettes.

He was shocked at that point, and communicated to the male clerk that he did not like the way he was treated.

She put the rum back and said to the male clerk, 'Shall we call security' and at that point they both

RST Liquor Commission holds public hearing for Prairie Hills permit

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - The Rosebud Sioux Tribe's Liquor Commission met on Thursday, March 29 in the council chambers and took public testimony on the request for a liquor license by the Prairie Hills Square, Inc.

A final decision on the commission's decision will be forthcoming on Tuesday, April 10 according to commission member, Anthony Bordeaux, Jr.

Prairie Hills Square is anticipating a May 1 grand opening and will include a steak house for fine dining and facilities for exercise and tanning. A new deck is being built, along with a kitchen, a conference/reception and there will be 3-4 shops available for rental. The golf course will be ready for play on April 14

Troy and Gena Heinert are stepping up as local entreprenuers and will be opening the Prairie Hills Square. It will house a steak house, a conference/reception room, an excercise and tanning facility, golf course and 3-4 rental spaces for other local businesses.

Commission members are Chairman, John Charles Arcoren and members Anthony Bordeaux, Jr., Pete Reynolds and Theresa Stead. There is one vacancy and with four members there likely could be a deadlock when it comes down to voting on license issuance.

Troy and Gena Heinert of Mission apparently have applied for a tribal liquor license to sell beer on-sale and off-sale at the Prairie Hills Square. The former Prairie Hills golf club was previously ordered shut down by the RST tax commission as it owed a relatively large amount of back taxes to the tribe.

Heinert said that as local people they wanted to step-up and become entrepreneurs as an example of small business development for the area. He said, "It was a good hearing and

ed. We always had thoughts of cutting back but the closer we got to the day of building we decided to go all the way. Fully handicap accessible, the entire building exterior is metal but the front is made out of T1-11 which is wood and the board walk is cedar and there are also some cedar steps. We used a gravel drive to stay with the rustic lodge type appearance."

Those frills include many innovative ideas that put the comfort and well being of the patients first. They include a full service 600 frame dispensary, three preliminary examining rooms, a visual therapy room where young people are actually taught the ability to see. He said there are many people that have never learned to see properly, and a Visual Field room where both side vision and are tested for various eye diseases.

"We are now able to treat glaucoma and even perform pre and post surgical cooperation with an ophthalmologist when eye surgery is indicated for a patient," he said.

There is also a room where people may sit comfortably while their eyes are being dilated.

And the new contact lens room is Dr. Rockey's favorite and it includes several of his 25 hand-made cabinets that are used throughout the vision center. "We wanted a rustic feel and the woodwork and cabinets stay close to that theme." The center decor includes native artwork with some enclosed in wood frames, also made by Dr. Rockey.

Contributing to the employment in Pine Ridge, the Vision Center increased their employees from one and a part time to five employees all of which are hired locally. Employee training is provided weekly to through on-line resources from Vision Source and Office Mate.

"Another positive thing that is going to happen, probably this summer is "The Exam Writer" which is a computer in each examining room, where the doctor will record his findings and then billing, insurance filing, lab orders, and other doctor correspondence, will be done automatically from that one station. All of the offices will be networked in June or July so patient records can be accessed in all three offices. Pine Ridge Vision information can be accessed at www.visionsource.pineridgevision.com.

Office hours are 8:30 to 5 p.m. five days a week Monday through Friday with four full time doctors rotating to staff all three locations.

The phone number for Pine Ridge Vision center is 867-2772.

the first one I had been to. We had a lot of support. Most of the objections were not against us, but against alcohol in general.

Whitney Meek made a good comment about prohibition. The licensing process makes it respectable. It puts regulation on it and all we can do is follow the ordinance…we didn't want the golf course closed down."

There were approximately 30 people in varying stages of entering or exiting the public hearing which appeared to be taped by the commission. Chairman Arcoren said, "This is a hearing for Troy and Gena Heinert for on-sale and off-sale. We are not here to debate the public, but to take information. Please keep your statements within three minutes so that everyone has the opportunity to speak."

From the testimony rendered there appeared to be many who were in favor of the sale of alcohol on the Rosebud reservation even though a tribal resolution exists calling for an alcohol free environment.

A couple of community members appeared to challenge the commission to exercise their full options under the liquor ordinance. Seemingly, they were saying that the commission needed to issue a permit in the case before them and not be denying all that come before them.

They were also saying that if the commission was not going to properly regulate the sale of liquor one way or the other then maybe they should simply vacate their functions and do away with the ordinance.

Another community member said that if a permit is issued in the case before them then the commission needs to go back and issue a license for all the ones that have been denied in the past.

Community member, Raymond Wright, said that he lives not far from the Prairie Hills establishment. He said, "I have lived out there for 15 years and seen more wrecks and picked up bottles. My deal is I oppose a license. My kids can ride and not worry about drunks…I enjoy having a quiet road."

Leroy Hairy Shirt of St. Francis community said, "Put it 50 miles from the reservation. It ruined 17 years of my life from alcohol."

According to Anthony Bordeaux, Jr. commission member, Tillie Black Bear of the White Buffalo Calf Woman Society also testified later against the issuance of a liquor permit.

For certain the public debate surrounding the issuance of RST liquor permits for those doing business on tribal lands is an emotional one.

It is a microcosm or smaller "snapshot" of what is happening on the Rosebud reservation but which applies to all of the people as a whole.

There are some who promote the idea of socially acceptable and responsible drinking, while others say that the tax income that is levied on the sales of alcohol will go to support the youth and prevention programs.

The other sentiment is that the tax income generated is a relatively small price to gain for the immeasurable toll that is realized when alcohol is combined with other negative issues that plague society in general.

The security guard said that if he did not leave he would be arrested. One employee grabbed his wrists and Black Feather said, "Get your hand off of me." He was then grabbed in a bear hug.

They pulled him out the door and one of them tripped him onto the sidewalk and pinned him down causing injury. A third individual then came out of Prairie Market and put his knee into the back of Black Feather and caused a ruptured disc which results in medical expenses totaling $12,000.

The police arrived at that point and arrest him and his wife then has to bail him out.

According to Abourezk the whole experience was very humiliating for Black Feather to be thrown to the ground and arrested in front of his family.

Mr. Abourezk, in his closing argument, recalled a statement by a former Rapid City police chief made to him years ago in describing the prejudice Native Americans felt.

The police chief told him he could imagine a little bit what it was like to be Native American, because he used to wear the blue uniform.

He said that when he went into a restaurant for lunch, he would get stared at, the restaurant would become quiet, and he felt like running out of the restaurant.

The police chief then said that this must be a little bit of what Native Americans experience on a daily basis. "But, I can take my blue uniform off at night, but Indian people cannot take their skin off."

Abourezk told the jury that they would have to decide whether Robert Black Feather overreacted or was a model of restraint.

But you have to imagine a lifetime of such experiences inside of Robert Black Feather's skin.

Lightning hit the old antenna in mid-April of 2006; KILI limped through the following week but went down for the count on April 23. The first plan included replacing the station's antenna and transmission line at a cost of $75,000, the next plan included replacing the transmitter as well and including a new grounding system and air conditioning unit for the equipment room and the cost went up to $210,000. In late May the station submitted a proposal for a digital conversion project and in early June, KILI learned that the station was to receive grants worth more than $300,000 from the Department of Commerce and the Corporation for Public Broadcasting to replace transmission equipment at KILI and to do a digital conversion.

"After I heard that KILI was back on, I drove to the southern edge of Rapid City and was able to pick it up loud and clear even with other stations surrounding the signal," said Milt Lee, a Rapid City resident who does contract work for the station, "it was so exciting to have it back, a good solid signal."

Early on in the process, the station found out that it would need to upgrade the electrical breaker panel to handle the new equipment as well as a backup generator awarded to KILI in December by the South Dakota Broadcaster's Association out of Pierre. Formal notice of the grants took place in August, bids were awarded in November and equipment was delivered in mid-January.

The new antenna and transmission line were installed the third week of January which improved the signal to an expanded broadcast area, according to Janis, the electrical upgrade was finished in early March, the back-up generator was hooked up and tested in late March and the transmitter on April 3. During the break-in period, the transmitter will run at 60 per cent, about 60,000 watts and will eventually be moved up close to 100 per cent of power at 100,000 watts.

Melanie Janis, KILI Radio station manager, with her grandson, proudly show the new transmitter that enabled the radio to go up to nearly full power this week. The KILI signal can be heard in the Black Hills area this week. Photo by Amanda Takes War Bonnett.

Over the last 11 months more and more people have used the internet to listen to KILI," said Janis, "and you would be surprised about some of the far away places people pick up on KILI."

On KILI's web site at www.kiliradio.org, listeners e-mail the station to say they are listening and really appreciate the opportunity to hear the music and shows generated from KILI and include listeners from Sweden, Switzerland, Wellington, New Zealand, Frankfurt, Germany, Essex, United Kingdom, the Netherlands, Sydney, Australia, Camp Zuma Japan and Nurmijarvi, Finland outside this country and many states across the US including Avondale Estates, GA, Colorado Springs and Ft. Collins, Colorado, Walker Lake Paiute and Duck Valley Reservations in Nevada, Redwood falls, East Lake and Stillwater, Minnesota, Sioux Valley Dakota Nation in Canada, Palestine and Fort Hood Texas, Florida, Maine, Wisconsin, Washington, Illinois, Oklahoma, California and Kansas.

In addition to the 80K back-up generator that has been installed, KILI is continuing to work through the process to install a 65KW wind turbine just south of the station at Porcupine Butte. Honor the Earth with Winona LaDuke, Pat Spears and Bob Gough of the Intertribal Council on Energy Policy and All Tribes Foundation with Faye Brown are all assisting the station with the renewable energy project.

"It was amazing, during the test with the generator when it was up and running and we made the switch the transfer was seamless and when we simulated a storm or electricity outage, it took all of 10-11 seconds for the back up generator to come on and provide electricity to run the station," said Janis.

The new digital transmitter, the new grounding system and a few additional support items are yet to be installed but will be in the coming weeks.

"We have missed a full power KILI Radio," said Paul Iron Cloud, past tribal chairman, "we as a nation take our station for granted and now I hope people realize just how important KILI has been to all of us."

New businesses, new buildings on Pine Ridge

KYLE - In the year of 2006, there was an estimated 800 business licenses that were issued from the tribe, the majority of those would be from individual vendors.

Ivan, Sorbel, director of the Pine Ridge Chamber of Commerce in Kyle, said the chamber has a membership of 113 businesses.

In the past two years, new businesses have cropped up in the Pine Ridge area, including two new businesses in the Kyle area. The Lakota Prairie Ranch Resort Motel and Restaurant, located six miles southwest of Kyle is a motel with wireless Internet, a fine dining café, gift shop, camping, RV park, trail rides, conference room and are currently adding cabins.

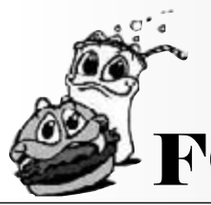
Rusty Puckett and Kathy Stover of Lakota Prairie Ranch Resort are one of three finalists in the Awards in Business Excellence. The ABEX awards are from the South Dakota Chamber of Commerce and Industry. Winners will be announced at the Governor's Giant Vision Business Competition Thursday, April 12 at the Sioux Falls Washington Pavilion.

One mile south of Kyle, Theresa and Rafael Mendoza opened their café the Food Hut, which offers fast food service with a dining area, with a small convenience store and will eventually expand their giveaway merchandise. They currently have blankets and other merchandise that can be used for 'giveaways.' They are open from 11 a.m. to 9 p.m., seven days a week. Their menu includes Indian tacos, soup of the day, hamburgers, chicken and other fast food items.

On May 4, Cangleksa Inc. will celebrate with a grand opening the construction of their building just east of Kyle. The new shelter is part of a newly constructed $1.35 million 9-acre complex which includes a $1.25 million shelter, the Tokahe Wicayapi Visitation Center and a new maintenance building.

The new 7,800-square-foot shelter will comfortably house up to 36 women and children as well as office and meeting space for the administrative and counseling services of the organization

The new $20 million Prairie Winds Casino recently moved to their new casino building and are planning their grand opening for June. The slot machines were moved two weeks ago and the new restaurant is now open for business.



The new restaurant offers the same fine menu and buffet as the old restaurant. The décor of the restaurant includes art master pieces by area artists which it gives customers a sense of eating in a beautiful gallery. The newly built casino motel is expected to open in the summer. The 78 room motel provides customers with indoor swimming and a hot tub. The motel is near completion and was awaiting the water booster relays to be added to the complex to provide increase the water pressure.

RAPID CITY - Salish Kootenai College defeated Northwest Indian College 98-89 for the men's championship Sunday in Rapid City while Salish Kootenai won a seesaw affair over Oglala Lakota College 76-69 for the women's title.

Oglala Lakota College hosted this year's American Indian Higher Education Consortium men's and women's basketball tourneys this past weekend in Rapid City as Salish Kootenai College of Pablo, Mont. swept both the men's and women's championship games on Sunday at the South Dakota School of Mines and Technology gym. For the Salish men, it was back to back titles, they beat Haskell Indian Nations University last year in Lawrence 77-70. Last year, Oglala Lakota College beat Salish in overtime to make it into the semis and eventually ended up third beating Blackfeet 79-49 in the women's tournament while Haskell Indian Nations University downed Northwest Indian College 84-46 for last year's title.

Delbert Trombley, tournament, MVP, led Salish Kootenai with 24 points in the championship game over NWIC after Salish grabbed the lead in the first half 46-38. Trombley was assisted by Howard Walker's 24 points, Ed Running Rabbit chipped in 19 and Justin Tonasket added 12. Blackfeet College defeated Little Big Horn 89-87 for third. Turtle Mountain, Oglala Lakota College, Fort Peck, Fort Berthold and Chief Dull Knife rounded out the field.

All star selections included: Howard Walker and Ed Running Rabbit/SKC, David Maddock and Doug Williams/NWIC, Elvis Old Bull Jr./LBH, Alvin Yellow Owl/Blackfeet, Dave Gorneau/TM, Johnathan Bear/FB, Lucas King/CDK and Dominic Saucedo/OLC. Turtle Mountain earned the sportsmanship trophy. Luczas King won the Slam Dunk contest.

Salish Kootenai and OLC started out fairly even but Salish went on a 22-0 run midway through the first half and led 34-24 at the half. OLC went on their own 18-0 run in the second half and pulled within two points until Salish rallied at the end of the game to take a seven point win for the championship. Bobbie Woodworth led Salish with 26 points, Angie Red Star helped with 14 and Geneva Cochran chipped in 10 while Tate Locust led OLC with 23 points, Tyann Pourier helped with 15 and Tera Cuny chipped in 14. Little Big Horn knocked off Turtle Mountain 88-75 for third. The women's tourney included Blackfeet, Fort Berthold, Chief Dull Knife and Fort Peck.

"We came out really cold in the first half and maybe even a little nervous," said OLC head coach, Mary Tobacco, "we found our rhythm in the second half and came up just a bit short, last year we were third, this year second and who knows maybe we will continue the climb all the way into the championship trophy nest year."

Salish Kootenai's Bobbie Woodworth, with 91 points in the tournament earned the MVP award while all star selections included Carla McLean and Rikki Ollinger/SKC, Tyann Pourier and Tera Cuny/OLC, Level Spotted Bear and Ray Lee Pretty Weasel//LBH, Serin Davis and Shannon Gunville/TM, Mary Standing Alone/FB and Janelle Talawyna/FP.

Turtle Mountain took home the team sportsmanship award.

Next year's AIHEC basketball tournaments will be in Bismarck hosted by the North Dakota tribal colleges and United Tribes Technical Education Center.

Bring Back The Kids concert with 3-point shoot-out at SGU

MISSION - Sinte Gleska University, Lakota Studies student, Harold Charging Hawk, is spearheading an effort to "Bring back the Kids" who have been a witness to the recent rash of suicides among the youth on the Rosebud reservation.

A Christian concert along with a three-point contest is being planned for April 14, Saturday at the SGU Multipurpose center from 2 p.m. to 10 p.m.

Charging Hawk is being joined by Chris Stewart, Stacey Charging Hawk, Dave Garcia of Denver, Colo., and Joe and Doris Cardswell, a group of volunteers who will coordinate registration, the three-point shootout and supper which will be served at 6 p.m.

Charging Hawk said, "We want the kids to be joined by their parents and grandparents and if this is successful we will do it on a continuing basis."

Area ministers from the Rosebud area have been invited as well as number of Christian bands who will highlight the concert including, Resurrection, Wanikiya, Tiospaye Gospel of Eagle Butte, Ray Stewart, Glen Old Lodge and Richard Iyotte. Iyotte originally posed the idea.

Guest Editorial

An open letter to the Mustangs

By Birgil Kills Straight
Kyle, S.D.

Congratulations to a wonderful season! You have given us many hours of happy times, fun times, as we travel around the country watching you play round ball.

My wife and I missed only one game, the game at Little Wound when you played St. Francis.

I went to Omaha on business and my plane was delayed in Omaha so I missed the connection at Minneapolis and my wife made a trip to Rapid City airport for nothing!

However, you gave us house of delight as you handle the ball as professionals!

Masterful and so much energy to burn, I get tired just watching you run, rebound and shoot!

Every one of you hit the three pointers with ease.

I enjoy the moment when I see you after hitting an especially tough shot, when you jump up and down with excitement, genuine thrill, adrenaline pumping, and a big smile on your face. You, as a team, accomplish what many people, many politicians, can't do, bringing people (fans) together for one common goal, to watch and enjoy youth in their glorious moments.

We share happiness together. You were medicine to us aging adults as veins and arteries in our bodies accommodate blood gushing through pumped by our happy hearts!

Returning from long trips such as Canton, my wife and I relive certain parts of a game when Rich, spins around with ball in hand and shoots over the tall guy and effortlessly puts the ball in through the hoop.

Or when Brice takes the ball away from the opponent and the ref blows his whistle (my wife would scream "that was not a foul, get some glasses, geeez!").

Or Devon hitting one from near the center line, or TJ runs through three guys and jumps, 'whoosh' or Shilo running through heavy traffic and comes back out and turns and hits a three pointer, or Ty runs through the lane for a lay up… you get the picture.

Most of you will be leaving Little Wound in May to points unknown only to you.

Perhaps, you will look back and see Brice, Ty, Casey, and Orin joined by some younger eager junior classmen standing there but ready for fall when the LNI will bring many young men from Lakota and Dakota country to be like the 2006-2007, Mustangs of Little Wound.

Your records will be challenged by your younger brothers, by another Lakota team, cheered on by pretty Lakota girls.

Another season of basketball will come but people will remember the Mustangs when they beat two of South Dakota's number 1 teams in one season!

This past couple weeks, we went through hectic times.

We hurt when you hurt.

We're ecstatic when you're happy. It will pass.

We will stood behind you when you honored the Cavs last Monday. I have never heard of a team, Lakota or white, do this in the past. You are the first as you are #1 to many of us.

Be proud.

Your ancestors will be proud of you as they remember the Woope Sakowin (Seven Laws) of the Lakota:

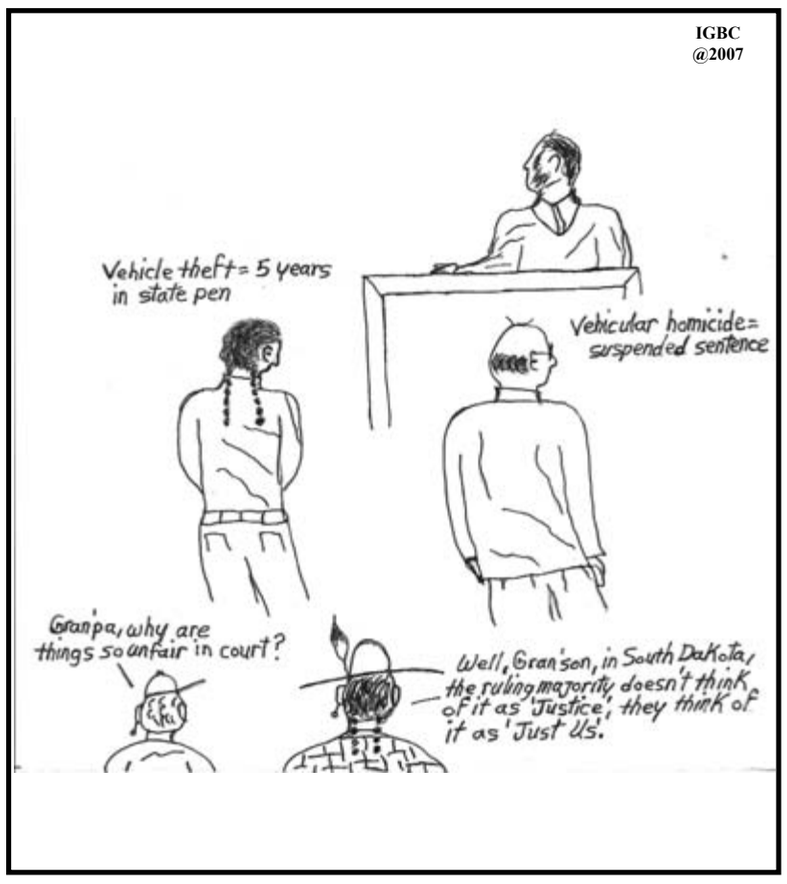
(1) Wacante Ognake: give, share, help, be generous;

(2) Wowaunshila: have pity and compassion;

(3) Wowauonihan: respect and honor;

(4) Wowacin Tanka: patience and tolerance

(5) Wowahwala: be humble, seek humility



(6) Woohitike: have principles, discipline, brave, courage;

(7) Woksape: understanding, wisdom.

Think of opposite meanings of these Lakota Woope Sakowin, that is what you have heard and seen this past couple weeks.

But, remember most of all, you are Lakota, you will survive and you will live.

You will be remembered as one of the greatest Lakota high school basketball teams in history.

A Lakota Perspective

The meaning of Sicangu Oyate

By Lydia Whirlwind Soldier

The Lakota people are great storytellers. The storytellers are the keepers of oral tradition; this includes tribal and family histories.

These stories have been translated and sometimes misinterpreted by some who have not heard the story told by tribal historians. The stories are of bravery, fortitude, generosity and wisdom, of great deeds, of great warriors and women; the stories are of victories, misfortunes of war, grief, death and survival. These stories embrace strands of teachings and reach into our ancestral past and extend into all aspects of our lives. They intrigue and inspire us.

They teach us that we can take the misfortunes of the past and find strength that helps us grow with pride and confidence. These stories tell us who we are, they teach us we have a special place and uniqueness in our tribalism and, just as important, the stories tie the Lakota Oyate together as a great nation.

As children we listened to these stories of greatness with wide-eyes ready to burst with excitement and unending questions. Yet, as children we were taught not to interrupt adults, therefore, many of us heard this particular story often. It sometimes brought tears as we marveled at the bravery of our people.

This is the story of how the Sicangu Lakota Oyate received their name. The French called us Brule. We called ourselves Sicangu Lakota. The Burnt Thigh People. We are a subdivision of the Lakota Oyate. (Nation).

Our name, Sicangu originated during the dog travois days, long before we captured Spanish horses that had somehow escaped from their Spanish owners. This was a time before the destruction of our land by overgrazing. The land was covered with indigenous plants that were sometimes thigh or waist high, with ravines filled with trees and wild fruit bushes. The Lakota respected this land and left the land as they found it, taking only what was needed for survival.

The story begins when a small group of Lakota traveled across what is now known as the northern Plains. As the group traveled along with their pack dogs they sent out scouts to survey the terrain for buffalo herds, sources of water and places to camp.

When a thunderstorm approached they decided to camp for the night. The thunder cracked and rumbled and the lightning lit up the evening sky. The scouts returned quite excited. A prairie fire was spotted northwest of their destination. The scouts reported that the fire ravaged everything in its path and advised the people to turn and head south or east to outrun the fire.

In the early morning light the entire western horizon glowed red from the fire. The people broke camp and scouts took up the rear. They traveled until fatigue, worry, and illness overtook the elders.

Early the next morning the smoke dimmed the sun and the high winds swirled up whirlwinds of embers and smoke. The wind seemed to follow them, picking up and switching direction.

In the chaos, families encouraged the young adults to try to outrun the fire telling them to try to reach a river. The headman called a quick council when he realized they could only move as fast the slowest frayed and weakened elder. As a group they came to a decision that they had to find a way to save the children

One elder woman said the only way they could save the children was to run back through the fire. The scouts were sent to the highest hill to determine the safest place to cross back over the fire. They scanned the countryside and in the distance, miles and miles away they saw landmarks they knew lay near the Mnisose. They knew they could not reach the river to save the elders.

The pack dogs were turned loose as the flames and smoke approached. Shouting voices were lost in the wind and in the roar of the fire. The elders prepared the children. Water bags that were carried by each member were emptied onto robes. The elder women who knew they could not run back through the flames took off their buckskin dress, soaked them in water and swaddled the children.

Those who were able cleared an area by stomping and pulling out the tall dry grasses where they would leave the elders who could no longer go on. The remaining water was poured on and around the elders before they turned and prepared to run back through the flames.

The women who would attempt to save the children tenderly hugged those they were to leave behind, keening and remembering the ties that sustained them through difficult times. Leaving them behind was not easy, yet they had to save the children.

The flames in the tall dry grasses licked and roared in the wind as the fire approached. The heat was unbearable. The children were given to the fastest and strongest

Words from the 'trenches'

We all need quiet time

Connie Smith-Blanco

Yesterday a very "round" robin and I shared the same space, neither one of us willing to give up our special place in the sun. Since it was spring I took some time staring at her deciding if her roundness was from a winter full of even rounder worms or whether she was expecting some baby robins in the near future. She sat quietly, two feet from me, and watched me like she was trying to decide if I had a good excuse was for being just as round as she was.

I wondered if she was staking out her territory on that branch by my porch in order to make her nest. I kept waiting for her to get spooked and fly away but she never did, she just continued to stare at me as she sat on that branch all cozy and content.

Even when I leaned closer to her she only blinked. And even as I talked to Manuel through the screen door on the porch, she held her ground.

Well, I could hold my ground too. I was cozy and content sitting on my chair in the spring sun. I had already sent the children to the basketball goal' at the end of the driveway and told them, "go play" (that's mommy talk for leave me alone for awhile)

And I gently "suggested" to my husband that this was a fine day to see if his new power tools were still working. (that's wife talk for "honey could you finish some of those odd jobs in the kitchen that you started almost a year ago?)

So having gone to all that trouble in order to have my quiet time (on the new porch my husband did finish with his power tools) I wasn't giving up my space up that easily.

I stared at her, she stared at me and if we weren't careful we could both doze off any minute. Naps and quiet time have always been my friends.

That's the funny thing about my current relationship with Spring. In my younger years when I first got spring fever I would run around like crazy doing all the things I was too depressed to do in the winter months.

I still get Spring fever, but now the only thing that runs around like crazy is my mind, while the rest of me is looking for a nice quiet place on the porch where I can get warm in the sun.

If the robin had ever before made a nest, filled it with youngins, and then filled the youngins with food while juggling a full time job "and" a full time husband, then she understood my need to just "be" on this fresh spring day.

Sometimes I just need to have that quiet time on a lazy afternoon.

When my children were young I always made them take afternoon naps and told them it was "their" quiet time. It didn't fool them then, and it doesn't fool them now.

They may have outgrown naps and quiet time, but I don't think I ever will. And I don't think that robin will either.

I expect to share my place in the sun with her for the rest of the summer. It's what keeps us going here in the trenches.

Notes From Indian Country

The dark legacy of the Indian boarding schools

By Tim Giago

(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

It is not in the least bit uncommon for the thousands of Native Americans pushed through the Bureau of Indian Affairs and Church operated boarding schools for more than 100 years, to have suppressed memories.

I wrote a book of poetry that was published in 1977, called "The Aboriginal Sin." A mainstream publisher would never have published the book, but the only Native American publishing house in the Nation, The Indian Historian Press, Inc., instead published it. The book is now many years out of print.

A Cahuilla Indian man from California, Rupert Costo, a man who had been a product of an Indian mission boarding school, read the packet of poems I had written in the 1950s, poems I wrote whenever I had this deep feeling of depression related to my 10 years at a Catholic Indian mission boarding school on the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota. As editor of the Indian Historian Press, Inc., he said to me, "These poems must be published."

A young reporter working for the Albuquerque Journal by the last name of Talley did a book review for that newspaper.

When she called the mission school I had attended, Holy Rosary Mission, she was told by one priest that I had never gone to school there and by another that I had only gone to school there for six months.

These priests could lie with a straight face because since I had been a student there the school had changed its name to Red Cloud Indian School. I had several of my former classmates write affidavits swearing that I had indeed attended Holy Rosary Mission. One former student, Gerald Clifford, now deceased, wrote, "I definitely remember Tim as a student at HRM during most of my school days there and although he may not have attended Red Cloud Indian School, he did attend Holy Rosary Mission." Thank goodness my family had saved many of the photographs taken of me while I was a student there because when I visited the mission school after the book came out, all of my photos had mysteriously vanished.

I can understand why the Catholic Church and its servants at Holy Rosary Mission would deny my very existence. It was because I had opened a can of worms and they were trying to stuff them back into the can. They were afraid of the notoriety and of the possibility of losing the thousands of dollars they solicited every day for the school. They were also in denial that any abuses had ever taken place at the mission school. My book of poetry exposed all of that.

Many former students wrote or called me to tell my how much they enjoyed the book and how much it had helped them to face their own demons. Now remember, this was 30 years ago, long before the national scandals about the abuse of children by Catholic priests ever hit the mainstream headlines. I recently wrote a book, Children Left Behind, and added the poems from The Aboriginal Sin into the book because I felt that they were a vital part of my life's experiences at the boarding school.

I also included many of the photographs of me while I was a student at the school so that the Catholic Church would have a hard time denying my presence at the school.

Two months ago, at a book signing, I spoke to about 250 people at the Indian Pueblo Cultural Center in Albuquerque. I noticed some of the elderly Indian women dabbing at their eyes during my talk. When I was done I took questions from the audience. A very elderly Indian man, with the help of his niece, stood up and leaned on his cane

The elderly man was from the Jicarilla Apache Reservation in Northwestern New Mexico.

He began his question with, "I went to a mission boarding school," and then he stopped speaking. Tears began rolling down his face and he apologized to me for crying. But he could not ask the question he wanted to ask because he was too overcome with grief.

I understand how this Jicarilla Apache man felt because when I speak about the time my eight year old sister, along with dozens of Lakota girls the same age, was raped at the mission school by a pedophile, I often get choked up, but I continue because I want people to know the horrible damage done to Indian children by the boarding schools over the more than 100 years they existed.

I want people to know how we were beaten with leather straps, shorn of our hair, and used as child slave-laborers at these boarding schools.

Thousands of former boarding school students, now in their old age, experienced and witnessed the many abuses.

The terrible impact of those days still haunt them and that is why I am glad that I have been able get many of them to unbind their years of suppression. When they start to speak, hesitantly at first, they soon get into the emotions of it and it seems that the floodgates are opened for the first time in many years, and the words and tears flow easily.

My younger sister told me about her abuse on her deathbed and I, along with her three children, finally understood why she had become a violent, alcoholic woman for so much of her life.

She died angry at the world and all alone. If only she had spoken sooner maybe we could have helped her.

My book and my lectures are now opening many of the Native minds that have forced out these terrible memories all of these years. Many of the problems of alcoholism and drug abuse now prevalent in Indian country can be traced back to the physical, emotional and sexual abuse suffered at the hands of our keepers in the BIA and mission boarding schools.

As we, the Indian people, revive the memories of those dreadful days, perhaps the process of healing can now begin.

women and warriiors. At what was considered the right moment the people began to run back through the flames. Some ran stepping high while the smoke engulfed and billowed over and around them. The flames pushed and pulled by the wind surrounded the people. Some smothered by the smoke coughed and struggled through. The people who made it to the other side and had not gotten lost in the smoke had not come through unscathed. Most had severe burns on their thighs, but the children they carried across the fire were safe.

It was a sad and dreadful time. The smoke still drifted from the live embers on the soot-covered ground as the fire passed. The people who had made it through forgot about their burned thighs and rushed back following the fire, searching for their loved ones. They lost the majority of their elders. Many people were orphaned. The elders who gave their lives so willingly to save the children were found and given a ceremonial burial. Some of the young who had outrun the flames returned, while others were never seen again.

As a tribe they shared a grieving beyond anything they had ever experienced in the past. The grief was like the smoke that engulfed them and seeped into every pore. Yet, as true Lakota, they knew when to let go. They came through the fire stronger in character and hope with clearly defined spiritual beliefs and a deep vivid sense of family

Memories of the past do not dissipate instead they define a people who rose out of the smoke and embers to continue their journey. A common greeting between the elders became "Ake pejito akan wakinajin." "I have once again come to stand on green grass." Meaning they had survived a terrible crisis. Since that time they carry the name Sicangu Lakota proudly for they know that many gave their lives to save the wakanyeja - he sacred ones - the children.

Leadership stabilizing at the Bureau of Indian Affairs

WASHINGTON, DC - Carl Artman was confirmed last month as the new assistant secretary of the Bureau of Indian Affairs and now the agency is able to stabilize its leadership team. Artman appointed George Skibine, of the Osage Nation of Oklahoma, as the acting principal deputy assistant secretary at the BIA.

The BIA was previously administered by two non-Indians, Jim Cason. Associate director secretary at the Interior Department had been in charge with Mike Olsen, an attorney. Neither were confirmed by the Senate or nominated by the president.

The Bush administration is close to being considered a "lame duck" administration and more permanent appointments will need to be made in order to further stabilize the new functions of the BIA after it reorganized.

In the time remaining, Artman has as his priorities Indian education, land-to-trust applications and designing programs to combat methamphetamine.

The other members of Artman's team who were hired before he was confirmed are Pat Ragsdale, a Cherokee who serves at the director of the BIA, Chris Chaney of the Seneca-Cayuga who is the head of law enforcement and Tom Dowd of the Hopi tribe who administers the newly created Bureau of Indian Education.

Billy Mills inspires Rosebud youth to 'dream'

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Legendary 10,000 meter 1964 Olympic champion, Billy Mills, from the Pine Ridge reservation was on the Rosebud and his two day visit was timely. In recent months, the Sicangu Oyate Lakota have been emotionally saddened by the death of several youth to suicide, automobile accidents and violence.

A number of approaches have been attempted, including the convergence of several suicide task force meetings. Young people have the need to witness the testimony of positive Native role models and some are taking this approach. Richard Iyotte, the Manager of KINI FM at St. Francis has also undertaken this strategy and focused on the programming of positive cultural and academic personalities to let the youth know that they are special and can achieve.

Billy Mills speaks to students at TCHS.

Mills spoke to the student body at the Todd County High School on Wednesday, March 28 after being introduced by Rosebud Sioux tribal President, Rodney M. Bordeaux.

The one hour talk was carried live over KINI FM during which Mills explained his pursuit of a dream that he refused to relinquish. Leading up to his amazing feat he described all the many miles he logged and all the times he dreamed of winning. With so many practice miles to his credit, it was no accident that he ultimately won out over the leading competitors. Luckily, the winning moments of his win in Spain have been carefully preserved in a black and white 90 second video and his victory is an emotional moment for Lakota people of all ages.

Mills' Olympic gold medal helped to pave the way for his life's work and he never wasted time in raising millions upon millions of dollars for charity. At 69 years old, he is stilling "running strong" and has sought to give many thousands of dollars back to many of the Lakota reservations on the northern plains mostly for low energy assistance.

Mills' life and his subsequent tireless work to impact the life of Native people is the stuff that new generations of Native people will likely emulate or follow. For Native youth it is a way to take the focus off of themselves and undertake projects that will give them pride and purpose as they perceive the "big picture" that is reservation life.

At the conclusion of Mills' presentation, he could be heard telling the youth that his travels have taken him to 91 countries. During each stop he concludes his talk by asking how many want to share a dream with him. He says that different cultures react in different ways to that request. Some will put up their arms and others may be reluctant to draw attention to themselves.

He says something to the effect that when Native youth are asked about their dreams, they do not raise their hands, but he can see the dreams in their eyes. Everyone has a dream and it is a simply a matter of establishing what that dream is and going after it feet first.

Billy Mills also spoke at the RST veterans affairs building on Wednesday night to a gathering of survivors who have lost loved ones. He said, "They were a support system to me. I have lost loved ones too." He then spoke at St. Francis Indian School, Todd County Middle School and at White River High School.

Dr. Dan Foster of the I.H.S. Mental Health department was instrumental in conducting the fundraising in order to bring Mills to the Rosebud reservation.

AHS approved for accreditation, hosts Lead-Deadwood delegation

By Connie Smith-Blanco
Times Staff

The Lead-Deadwood group was led by Tim Kosters, elementary principal; Greg Calabro, guidance counselor; Larry Woodle. fourth grade teacher; Cheryl Wilder, literary leader; Pam Smith, math recovery instructor; Edith Steger, kindergarten teacher and Carol Greco, second grade teacher. Photo by Connie Blanco.

ALLEN - American Horse School was unanimously approved for accreditation this year from the South Dakota Board of Education. Don Leikvold from the Lead-Deadwood Schools, and also on the accreditation team, was so impressed with the school during their accreditation visit, that he sent the elementary principal and six teaching professionals from the Lead-Deadwood Schools to see it first hand.

American Horse School is one of Pine Ridge Reservation's K-8 schools with an enrollment of 230 students with a service area of the Allen, Martin and Porcupine area.

The group arrived Wednesday morning, March 28 and were given a personal tour of the school American Horse School Principal Gloria Coats-Kitsopoulos. Of interest to the group was the American Horse School classrom Tiospayes and the innovative curriculum that it's principal and school board have developed the last five years. Classrooms or Tiospayes are named for South Dakota native animals with names such as buffalo, owl, coyote, etc.

The Core Knowledge Curriculum has been very successful at the school and has been widely praised by students, teachers and community members. It has been beneficial in teaching literature and promoting reading levels within the school. The curriculum focuses on language arts and provides resources without having to purchase textbooks every year.

The Lead-Deadwood group enjoyed lunch at the school and visits to various lower grade Tiospayes in the morning and upper grade Tiospayes in the afternoon. Visits were made to the Lakota Studies classroom, Teacher Resource room, Business and Administrative offices as well. The Teacher Resource Room got the group's attention as it is stocked with multi-level reading and teaching materials. They were impressed with the resources available to each teacher and Tiospaye in the school.

Frances White Lance and Phillip Waters, Lakota studies instructors, explained some of their program's resources to the group.

More than 900 attend AIHEC, $100,000 disbursed in scholarships

By Vicky Wicks
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY- In a meeting room at the Ramkota Inn, nine Native authors chatted with people who had come to see them, and at the back of the room, a table was piled high with their published works.

On one side of the room, Geraldine Goes In Center talked to a woman about her publications, Jokes Heard Around the Rez and Lakota Cook Book.

Farther into the room, Russell Means stood engrossed in conversation with a young man, and Donovin Arleigh Sprague leaned against a wall next to Joseph Marshall.

Marshall is Sicangu Lakota and is well known for his books. On the other side of the room, Don Montileaux signed copies of his illustrated book, Tatanka and the Lakota People, and talked to fellow author Ed McGaa.

The Native American authors' reception was just one of the offerings of the 26th annual American Indian Higher Education Consortium Conference held in Rapid City on March 24-27.

The writers introduced themselves-Karen Lone Hill, Leon Hale and LaVera Rose were the other three authors-and then people took seats in the packed room to listen to a special presentation by Dr. Craig Howe entitled Hate Speech, Horses and Hostages: The Untold Story of Lewis & Clark in Teton Territory.

Howe, who was raised north of Martin, told the audience that he researched documents such as maps and journals kept by Lewis and Clark's expedition crew to develop an alternate theory of the explorers' encounters with the Teton Sioux: that the Tetons were not "the vilest miscreants of the savage race," as Clark said in an early example of hate speech, but instead were the victims of the explorers' horse thievery and hostage-taking.

While Howe spoke, some of the authors had to leave to judge competitions elsewhere in the building.

There was a carnival atmosphere at the conference, with more than a dozen rooms holding something of interest-games, competitions, art, food, and presentations, offered all day long and into the evening.

Some events were intellectual, such as Howe's presentation; others, like the hand games in the Rushmore Room, were just for fun. Monday night's activities ended with a dinner and powwow, and Tuesday night ended with a dance.

About 900 people registered for the event, and that number was augmented by spectators, vendors, and others, according to Jonnie Clifford, of Oglala Lakota College and 2007 conference coordinator.

The students took over two convention areas in the Ramkota Inn, and walls and display boards held posters advertising upcoming events: a chess tournament, Student Congress elections, showings of student films, a Mount Rushmore-Crazy Horse tour, one-act plays.

Hallways looked like bazaars offering jewelry, art, music CDs, movie DVDs, and lots of books written by and about indigenous people.

Also lined up in hallways and a display room were booths sponsored by institutions of higher education, both tribal and non-tribal.

On Sunday night, the American Indian College Fund scholarship winners were announced, according to Tom Shortbull, president of Oglala Lakota College. Each of 33 colleges gets about $100,000 from AICF, and each college sets its own criteria and decides how to disperse the money, he said.

This year's AIHEC president is Cheryl Crazy Bull, former vice president of Sinte Gleska University on Rosebud Reservation and current president of Northwest Indian College on the Lummi Reservation near Bellingham, Wash.

Crazy Bull said there are 35 tribal colleges that the consortium supports with advocacy and member services. The first AIHEC conference was held in Rapid City 26 years ago; the next annual conference will be held in Bismarck, N.D.

Porcupine School students to be tested April 10-12

PORCUPINE - Porcupine School will be testing students for Dakota Step from April 2 to April 20. Students in grades 3 to 8 will be tested April 10 to 12. There will be no school for grades K-2 on April 10 to 12. Make up testing will be April 16 to 20. If parents have questions, they can all the school at 455-6450.

Parents are encouraged to prepare their children for testing with the following:

-Have your students get a good night's rest before the testing.

-Eat a good breakfast.

-Encourage your student to listen carefully to the directions that are given for the test and follow them. If the directions are not clear, tell them to ask their teacher to repeat or explain them.

-Encourage your student's to do their best and not give up.

-Help your child to understand that the DakotaSTEP gives him or her a chance to show what they know about a subject.

-Ask your child to maintain regular study habits. Do not ask your child to give extra study time for the Dakota STEP. The test covers more schoolwork than your child can learn in a few extra hours.

-Students who are calm and sure of themselves do better on tests.

In Memory Angie Reyes

In loving memory of my beautiful sister Angelina

Sister you're so special
You really know me well
If I'm not happy
You can always tell
You're always there beside me
In every thing I do
To me you are more than just My sister
You are my best friend too.
I will miss you dearly:
love you
I know you knew that you are my hero
Rest in peace
YiYi

In loving memory of Angie

In loving memory of our beloved wife, mom, aunt, Grandma Angelina

If I could give you diamonds for each tear you cried for me, If I could give you Sapphires for each Truth you've helped me see, If I could give you ruby's for the heartache that you have known, If I could give you pearls for the wisdom that you've shown, then you'll have treasure, mother, that would mount up to the skis, that would almost match the sparkle in your kind and loving eyes.

But I have no pearls, or diamonds, as I am sure you're well aware, so I'll give you gifts more precious, my devotion, love and care

We have been truly blessed with you in our lives; you leave a void that will be filled with all our fun, happy, precious moments spent with you.

All our love, your family,

ASK ANNA

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

Thank you for all the help you've done for many people here on the reservation.

First of all, there is a situation where I work. There are three women who have ganged up on one other woman and do harassing things to her. She is at her wits end in trying to defend herself and it has come to the point where she got really bad headaches. I have tried to help her in a way by advising her and listening to her, and even with that I got a headache also. I notice these three women seem very angry and jealous of her, but I think they are generally like that with many situations in their lives.

So my question is, is it possible that people can become so angry and jealous that they could send off enough bad energy enough to give other people headaches? Maybe it's not on purpose but it's too coincidental not to wonder if they are somehow putting out such bad vibes that it physically hurts the people they are after? Is there a way that she can protect herself? I don't know what her belief system is for sure but I think she's a Christian. Do you see me being able to spiritually protect myself from them? Do I need to do more than smudge this environment?

And, lastly, they seem like they are on a rampage, when do they stop? I know there is a spiritual law that says what goes around comes around, so when do they have to answer for all this negative mean-spirited behavior?

Pilamaya Anna Bee. Many people respect your opinion.

Signed: It's getting scary

Dear It's getting scary:

Yes. Extreme tension and the energy of anger hit the "energetic body" or body energy field very hard. The proof of that is something everyone can identify with: If you walk into a room where someone is very angry, it is immediately felt, and in fact, generally illicits an angry response or excited response from everyone that enters the room. Teachers know this - that is why they work hard to control the environment of their students through calm reactions and calming responses. Furthermore, the emotional response of fear or anger can constrict blood vessels at the cortex area of the brain - thus: headaches!

My business partner and I often "take" illnesses from people - including headaches. We are empaths. We "contage" what we are surrounded with. We use this ability in our healing sessions, and in fact, many times do take the illnesses that others have from them. The difference is that we do not hold onto the symptoms - because they do not belong to us.

Your friend that is suffering so much needs to consider her health as jeopardized: by the bad "vibes" and by the actions of these insecure sick women. It is almost impossible to survive in a successful way in an environment that is dominated by a conspiracy to get rid of you. It is unhealthy and destructive to the psyche of the victimized person to remain in the environment. I recommend that your friend and you begin to document everything that these women conspire to do.

If I were your friend, I would find another job. It may be easier than suffering in an unfriendly environment.

You have very strong faith. You can pray for her and pray that she develop a relationship with God that allows her the understanding that she is safe.

For your own protection continue to sage and pray. Check with your interpreter man to find out what he recommends in the way of tobacco ties or prayer flags and where they should be located. Carry some tourmaline (black is recommended) and place rose quartz strategically in locations around your office. Rose quartz brings calming and loving energy in; black tourmaline is a defender against negative energy. It will gather it for you.

Don't worry. These women are setting themselves up for disaster. The bad thing is it isn't that fast - the good thing is: when it comes, it comes hard and quick and is totally emotionally embarrassing and devastating. Just wait.

Part II: Equal Justice Commission

The deep wounds of injustice

Editor's Note*In March 2000, the United States Commission on Civil Rights, after holding a one-day hearing in Rapid City, issued a report critical of the treatment of Native people in the state's criminal justice system.

Calling the Civil Rights Commission's findings "garbage," then-Governor Bill Janklow ordered a study of racism in criminal justice to be done by the University of South Dakota's Government Research Bureau.

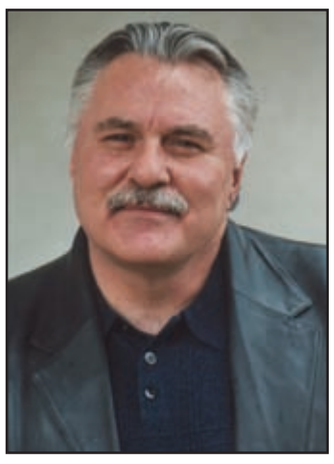
In 2003, USD Professors Richard Braunstein and Steve Feimer issued a report that found disparities across the board in the criminal justice system, from arrest to parole, but could not attribute those disparities to race.

Braunstein and Feimer reported finding "numerous disparities" in sentence length and granting of probation or suspended impositions - outcomes imposed by judges at time of sentencing - but with the limited data they had, they could not determine if those disparities resulted from judicial bias or defendant conduct, such as prior criminal records or conviction of a violent crime, both of which would warrant longer sentences.

To determine whether bias in the judiciary was perceived or actual and to what extent, the Unified Judicial System, in 2004, established the Equal Justice Commission to study the issue and report on its findings.

The commission met on all reservations but Flandreau and in Rapid City, Pierre, and Sioux Falls, holding meetings and listening to people recount their experiences with the criminal justice system.

The commission's report came out in 2006 and included perceptions of bias at all levels of the criminal justice system, with some criticisms directed specifically toward the judiciary. The following article is the second of a series on findings of the commission report.



By Vicky Wicks
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY - Arrest statistics paint a stark reality of American Indians in Rapid City and although they account for only 12 percent of the city's population, 54 percent of adult and juvenile arrestees in 2006 were Native.

According to Rapid City Police Department statistics, those arrestees were charged with 48.4 percent of felonies and 54 percent of misdemeanors.

Disproportionate representation of Native defendants is an undeniable fact, University of South Dakota's Associate Professor Richard Braunstein said in his 2005 study of race and criminal justice. But reasons for the disparity can't be explained "simply by calling for opinions, and the statistical studies do not reveal any definitive answers," Braunstein said.

TOUGH TO PROVE

People who told their stories to the Equal Justice Commission at its statewide meetings in 2004-2005 relayed their perception that minorities are charged with crimes under circumstances that whites are not charged.

Tracey Fischer, EJC executive director, said, "There's a lot of anecdotal information out there, but because there's no hard data, it's hard for those people, who perceive bias, to prove their cases."

But bias is "definitely there," according to Laurette

RST council passes motion declining purchase of 800 acres of land

No extension granted in closing the deal, RST now owns successful bid

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - A couple of weeks ago many Rosebud reservation residents were discussing an impending land deal that was going to be sealed by the Tribal Land Enterprises, a chartered entity of RST. A couple of inquiries for information was requested for the public to be fully informed of the basic facts surrounding the potential land acquisition which had been bid upon at a public auction held off of the confines of the Rosebud reservation. That latter fact may have some bearing on the issue and will be discussed later in this article.

No information was forthcoming at that time and the RST council had not addressed the issue in an official sense. TLE Director Calvin Waln, had attended a public auction and bid up to $1,250 per acre for a total tract of land amounting to 800 acres in total and amounting to a figure of $1 million dollars. TLE had discussed a bidding strategy prior to the auction; however, it was abandoned because of inclement weather.

The total bid per acre appeared to take many people by surprise and prompted a lot of discussion to the effect that when Lakota people desire to sell their land, they may be offered no more than $300 per acre. Another consideration that seemed to surface was the fact that non-tribal ranchers and farmers in the area would now be of the assumption that future proposals to sell land to RST would bring them a similar inflated per acre price.

RST President, Rodney M. Bordeaux, issued a press release on April 10 in which he writes, "I do support the purchase of the Zibell Estate land in southeastern Todd County. This land was bid for $1,250.00 per acre or $1 million dollars for 800 acres. The decision of the tribal council to disapprove the purchase of this land has created problems for future land purchases. We must remember the history of our people, our leaders who fought and sacrificed for our tribal sovereignty, our ancestral homelands and do what we can to protect and build upon what they achieved."

Without delving into the history of the Tribal Land Enterprises, the tribally chartered entity appears to be a highly successfully model of land acquisition and management on behalf of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe. In fact, Ross Swimmer of the Trust Reform Office in Washington, DC praised the model that was created specifically for RST to manage its land holdings.

This unique and highly successful program is an entity that is sometimes cloaked in a certain mystique around the Rosebud; for, unless one is a landowner or a leasee, most tribal members have little understanding of the function and daily affairs of TLE. The organization will likely benefit from future advertisement and information sharing as to their pur-

Fogg, Kamerzell and Moffitt now on Martin City Council

MARTIN - The much anticipated Martin City Council Election set for June 5 has been cancelled.

The anticipation stemmed from a judge's earlier verdict that the Martin election system would change to an "At Large" voting system beginning with the upcoming City Council election in June. The judge's decision came from a lawsuit filed by the American Civil Liberties Union on behalf of two city residents who challenged the city's voting system as unfair practices.

This At Large system would have provided each voter with three votes that they could choose to vote as they wished, even if it meant voting all three votes for the same candidate.

The judge made the ruling in response to what appeared to be unfair practices and purported violations of individual voter rights in Martin.

However, the Martin City Council will seat three new council members on the size member council, despite the election cancellation. These individuals filed certificate of nomination in the office of the Finance Officer and would have run unopposed for the three open council seats. Certificates of Election will be issued in the same manner as would be done following an election.

The new council members will be Cecilia "Tootie"

RST Liquor Commission approves license for Prairie Hills Square

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

MISSION - The RST Liquor Commission held a regular meeting for Friday, April 6 on the request from the Prairie Hills Square for a license to sell beer off-sale and a full beverage service on-sale.

Prairie Hills Square will now await word from the Todd County Commissioners as to their approval of the new business to sell off-sale beer at that location. The commissioners apparently will discuss the permit request on April 18. Troy Heinert said, "We're excited. It is a big responsibility that we are ready to take on. We hope to provide a good atmosphere. Everybody has been positive."

Located a couple of miles south of Mission the business offers a golf course for area golfers that served as a location for Easter egg hunters on Saturday. According to Troy Heinert some 300 youngsters participated and hunted for 400 plastic eggs which contained prizes.

According to commission member Anthony Bordeaux, Jr. the commission initially voted and the result was a 1-1 tie. Commission Chair, John Charles Arcoren, then voted to break then tie and voted in favor of granting the liquor license. The commission has a vacancy for two members and is advertising for tribal members to apply for a seat on the commission.

In recent weeks, Heinert and wife Gena, the new owners have undertaken some major renovations of the former Prairie Hills golf club. They are building a new deck and will also offer a conference room and reception area in addition to exercise and tanning facilities. In addition, Pourier, one of the founders of Society for the Advancement of Native Interests - Today. She said she's heard from people who were stopped by police officers, asked for identification, and asked what they were doing even though they were not engaged in criminal activity.

"Police of their own accord stop people because they're Native … because they're brown," Pourier said. "It's my feeling that cops may be out there looking for someone to arrest.

"I hate to say that, too, because there are some nice cops," Pourier said.

THE POLICE RESPONSE

Rapid City Police Captain Steve Allender calls attention to 2006 domestic violence statistics to dispute allegations of police bias. State law and department policy require an officer to make an arrest in a domestic violence situation if there is evidence that an assault occurred.

Officers might exercise discretion in other assaults, Allender said, but in domestic violence situations, "when that call comes in … officers know an arrest will be made," Allender said. The officer "has only one decision to make, and that's whether an assault has occurred."

With officer bias apparently eliminated, American Indians fared even worse, statistically speaking: according to 2006 domestic violence data, 75.5 percent of felony arrestees and 59.9 percent of misdemeanor arrestees were Native.

Last year the police department responded to 102,063 calls for assistance, resulting in 9,796 arrests. For efficiency's sake, the department assigns patrols to nine areas of the city, with approximately the same call load in each section.

Downtown and North Rapid bring in more calls for service than the rest of the city combined, Allender said.

"That's something that's offensive to people who live on the north side of town," Allender said. "But no matter how you cut it, that's a fact."

The department's patrol map doesn't show race, income, property values, age of homes, or age of citizens, Allender said. "Our business is to provide police services. All we need to know is where to send police officers and how many."

Race is not necessarily the determining factor in the high crime rate; Lakota Homes and Sioux addition - two areas north of Interstate 90 with heavy Native populations - are "absolutely a success story," Allender said. Lakota Homes is "the second lowest area for calls."

If racism is a factor in the number of Native people arrested, it possibly originates with the people calling dispatch for police assistance. "The police department is an extension of the average citizen. We're responding to something they find concerning," Allender said.

When the department heightens its efforts in concentrated areas of crime, arrest rates go up.

Four years ago, in response to an inordinate number of victims along the bike path north of Omaha Street, the police initiated Operation Safe Path, Allender said. The city cleared brush to reveal creek banks, dispersed the concentration of homeless people, and enacted a zero tolerance policy for drinking in that area.

"It's probably accurate to say we've made hundreds of arrests of dozens of people" near the bike path, Allender said.

The department's actions were successful. "Homeless victimization has virtually stopped in those areas," he said. "However, those efforts have been viewed as oppressive and uncaring, the reason being that it apparently targets Native American and homeless people."

SOCIOECONOMIC PROBLEM

"Oftentimes it's the minorities who get pushed into the basement of society, and then society criticizes them for having basement behavior," said Rapid City lawyer Charlie Abourezk, one of founders of the Community Relations Council, a volunteer citizens' group started in 2003 to mediate complaints about law enforcement officers.

The disparity in arrests has less to do with race than it does with poverty, Abourezk said. Dire socioeconomic conditions coexist with violence, low self-esteem, and addiction, and in our area, Native people are disproportionately impoverished, he said.

Abourezk offered a comparison situation: In Chicago, thriving factories pulled out of the inner city and took their business to third-world countries, and nearby white employers refused to hire black people. The inner city was "left to implode on itself," leaving survival dependent on an illicit economy of drugs, prostitution, and crime.

The same dynamics correlate to South Dakota Indian reservations and neighborhoods, Abourezk said.

Reservations are saddled with a 75-80 percent unemployment rate, Abourezk said. "Kids there are so optimistic when they graduate," looking forward to going to college or to off-reservation towns to find jobs, but then, "a few years later, they hit a wall of employment discrimination," he said. "Their hopes start to dwindle," and they return to the reservation and start to decline.

"It's tough to be a young Indian male," Abourezk said. Rage and anger grow into a sense of hopelessness, and they engage in self-destructive behavior, maybe joining gangs for safety and a sense of belonging. "When society alienates you, you reach out," he said.

Petty crimes spill over into drinking, and drinking engenders more serious crimes, Abourezk said.

"Do we make law enforcement carry the burden of that? Or society?"

A SPIRITUAL DISCONNECTION

Pourier doesn't like contemplating whether Native people commit crimes at a higher rate. "I hate it, because it makes me sad," she said.

But if indigenous people have a higher crime rate, Pourier blames history and its resultant economic and spiritual poverty.

Indigenous people were conquered and forbidden by law to practice their religion, and paternal treatment from the U.S. government, with subsidies and commodities, "stripped our males of their role, which was protector and provider," Pourier said.

"The people didn't get to observe ceremonies, our traditional processes for dealing with pain and grief," she said. "So where did it go? It became internalized."

Internalized grief results in depression and alcoholism, or it's projected outward as anger and crime, Pourier said.

A disconnection of spirit leads to a life pattern of wandering and searching and an inability to sustain relationships, she said. "The spirit has been violated and it's never been healed."

"When you hurt so bad you can't stand to take another breath," chemical abuse becomes a solution, Pourier said.

If Native people are committing crimes at a higher rate, she said, "it goes back to a much deeper wound than what we see on the surface."

THE STATEWIDE SITUATION

In South Dakota, Native people account for 8.8 percent of the population, according to U.S. Census Bureau data. But 27.7 percent of adults and 30.1 percent of juveniles arrested off reservations are Native, according to data voluntarily submitted by 91 percent of the state's law enforcement agencies to the state Division of Criminal Investigation.

Those figures don't include arrests made by the South Dakota Highway Patrol, which does not collect race data.

Twenty-two legislators introduced a bill during the 2007 legislative session designed to identify whether officer bias is a factor in traffic stops.

The pilot program would have been conducted in at least 15 counties, and law officers, including highway patrol troopers, would have been required to collect data on traffic stops, including the officer's perception of the race of the driver, the violation, whether there was a search, and the outcome of the stop (warning, citation, arrest).

The bill died in the House Transportation Committee after Attorney General Larry Long and Highway Patrol Colonel Dan Mosteller testified against it.

Long told legislators that supervisors can monitor for officer bias by watching audio and visual recordings of stops captured by cameras in patrol cars.

Mosteller objected to "shotgunning the whole state because of some perceptions" and instead suggested minorities can make complaints to the agency if they perceive officer bias. If nothing comes of the complaint, he said, "that's why we have the attorney general."

there will be rental space for other businesses. Heinert said, "We are building the kitchen this week. I found a place of kitchen equipment and I also submitted our building plans to the state."

Heinert also said he listened to some of the helpful suggestions that were offered during the RST Liquor Commission hearings. For example, he noted that the lighting in the parking lot will be improved.

Heinert said that as young entrepreneurs they decided to step forward and build a business that will ultimately employ 15-20 local people and give them a good steady job.

The fact that Prairie Hills Square has been granted a license by the RST Liquor Commission is likely generating discussion and debate as to its merits. There has been some controversy regarding the issue of additional licensing of liquor sales since there exists a tribal resolution that called for the Rosebud reservation to be alcohol free by the year 2000.

RST Liquor Commission Chair, John Charles Arcoren, did say that their legal counsel asked them to send a letter to Troy Heinert asking him to comply with the hours that have been set forth indicated their hours of operation.

In addition, some argue that it is hypocritical to sell alcohol products at the Rosebud Casino Fuel Plaza and the Rosebud Casino when other requests from businesses to sell alcohol are being turned down. The other sentiment is that if the tribe is going to grant a license to a new business to sell alcohol then it should act retroactively to give it to others.

Section 10-2-6 of the RST ordinance gives the commission absolute discretion to approve or disapprove an application in accordance with the provisions governing its administration.

poses. In actuality, there apparently are other services which tribal members can avail themselves of even if they are not landowners and that fact will become evident, perhaps, now that it has attracted the attention of the RST council.

Waln addressed the RST council in an official meeting last week and pointed out that certain relevant policies to guide future fee land acquisitions are being developed.

It was at the very same meeting that RST District 3 council representative, Robert Moore, sponsored a council motion relative to the intended purchase which read, "Motion by Robert Moore that we not purchase the Zibell land at $1,200 an acre and to work with the Tribal Attorney, Mato Standing High and the TLE Director to recover any expenses incurred through the bond."

Moore's objection in part, centered around the fact that TLE had presented a petition to finance the land deal after the fact. He also noted that if a line of credit had been approved by the council it would have necessitated a waiver of sovereign immunity and he is adamantly opposed to that.

RST council representative, Cyril "Whitey" Scott, also from Antelope said that he was not opposed to acquiring the 800 acres as bid upon, however, he was opposed to the process which was utilized for the successful bid.

RST council representative from Rosebud community, Fern Bordeaux-Bolz, who also sits on the TLE board generously agreed to provide an account of the events surrounding the successful bid by TLE on behalf of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe and which has not been resolved to date.

There exists an Isolated Tracts Act which was originally created for RST and it allows the tribe to use these tracts as mortgage for a loan. In 1994 there was an assessment done and the value of the isolated tracts amounted to $2.1 million. TLE was able to purchase the Mustang Meadows ranch and more recently the Ethel Taylor ranch at a price of $641,000.

Bordeaux-Bolz said that such land acquisition work is something that has a certain sentimental and historical aspect to it, and the tribe should always pursue such acquisition when the opportunity presents itself. She said, "Once our land no longer exists, we no longer exist." She noted that the Isolated Tracts Act mandates that the BIA Regional Director initiate the process to put the fee land into trust and, thus, making the process more efficient and speedy.

Apparently as the land in question in the Hidden Timber area came for bid, TLE Executive Director, Calvin Waln, had in his possession a petition to participate in the bidding process that had been signed by four of the seven TLE board members. Wells Fargo Bank was of the understanding that the bid would not exceed $800 per acre as recommended by the appraiser, however, that figure did not hold true.

The actual site of the 800 acres lies north of the Hidden Timber dam and approaches the Tripp County line in southeastern South Dakota. Hidden Timber lies in a southeasterly direction from the town of Mission.

Bordeaux-Bolz also agreed that a "fee acquisition policy" needs to be created by TLE in order to serve as a guide for future land bids. During the day of the auction, after TLE made a bid of $1,250 per acre a couple from New Mexico dropped out of the bidding and thus, the winning bid was held by TLE.

The couple apparently made it known that they wanted to purchase more land in the Hidden Timber area. One council representative was heard on KINI radio last week noting that people from the Rocky Mountain region are wanting to retire to remote and pristine areas much like that which exists on the Rosebud reservation.

Another objection to purchasing the land even with the successful bid was that the tribe has openly said that their priority is to buy back tribal lands in Mellette County that have been lost in the past due to a variety of unknown reasons. Bordeaux-Bolz said that since the successful bid on the 800 acres, four ranchers in the Mellette County area have offered to sell their land to TLE. Waln stated that prior to this bid one person owning land in Mellette County had asked for $1,250 per acre for his land. Two others in Mellette County have asked high prices on their offer to TLE.

Another concern that is being expressed is that RST will likely lose the $100,000 "earnest" money which it put up as security for the bid. Also, there is concern that since the auction was held on state property that RST may or may not be liable for a suit for the total of $1 million dollars now that the motion has been made and passed not to go forward with the purchase.

Bordeaux-Bolz said that a legal opinion has yet to be rendered on the whole process and that TLE may still want to purchase the land. Waln has been directed to ask for an extension in closing the deal.

Waln said that all of his efforts to secure an extension of time for closing had failed.

TLE apparently is healthy financially speaking and as a chartered entity it has been quite successful in managing its assets. She said TLE makes dividend distributions twice yearly to its shareholders and the tribe. The one last fall saw TLE give a check to the tribe in the amount of $500,000.

Conference champs, Pine Ridge, Little Wound dominate West River basketball selections

Mendoza will not return as Lady Thorpe coach

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

MARTIN - Coaches and administrators from the six West River conference schools gathered in Martin on Wednesday to make the all conference selections for girl's and boy's basketball. The conference includes Bennett County, Todd County, St. Francis, Little Wound, Pine Ridge and Red Cloud.

The 2006/2007 basketball season saw three teams qualify for state tournaments including state runner-up finishes for both the girls and the boys as Bennett County girls took second in state this year in Spearfish and the Little Wound boys took second in the recent State A tourney in Rapid City; Red Cloud girls won Region 8A and took eighth in state.

The Pine Ridge Lady Thorpes won the conference and finished the regular season undefeated and ranked number one in the state; Bennett County won District 14A and Region 7A and lost to Vermillion in the State A championship game. Christian Janis, Lacey Weston, Nichelle Red Owl and Saadia Tasso of Pine Ridge earned all conference honors. Bennett County's Maggie O'Neil, Keely Krolikowski and Mary Jo May also were all conference.

Red Cloud's Marque Lunderman and Ida Clark, Todd County's Tia McCloskey and Shelby Hunger and Marcia Rodriguez of St. Francis were also all conference. Honorable mention nods went to Robin Webber and Sophia Janis of Pine Ridge, Amy O'Neil/Bennett County and Shaina Clifford and Lisa Bear Robe of Red Cloud.

Bill Mendoza, Pine Ridge's first year head coach announced at the meeting that he was returning to school and would not be back next year to coach. Mendoza had been an assistant coach for the boy's team last year and finished up with a 21-1 record in his first year as head girl's coach at Pine Ridge.

Three conference boy's teams made it to region championship games as Little Wound beat Todd County in the Region 7A championship and Red Cloud lost to eventual State A champs St. Thomas More in the Region 8A championship. The Mustangs went on to lose to the Cavaliers in the State A championship game in Rapid City in mid-March.

All conference selections went to Brice Hornbeck, Rich Big Boy and TJ McCauley/Little Wound, Christian McGhee, Lester Gotheridge and Billy Scott/Red Cloud, Gunner Krogman, Steve Antoine and Vern Menard/Todd County, Travis Spotted War Bonnett, Taylor Brushbreaker and JJ Arcoren/St. Francis, John Provost and Michael Jack/Pine Ridge and John Slattery/Bennett County.

Honorable mention nods went to Ty Lunderman and Devon LeBeau/Little Wound, Dave Giago, Mike Twiss and Bryer Iron Cloud/Red Cloud, Aaron Stodard, Jordan His Law and Mark DuBray/Todd County, Travis Spotted Horse and Gary Whipple/St. Francis, Oris Morrison, Mitch Bagola and Austin Red Shirt/Pine Ridge and Delmar Toczek and Jake Sasse/Bennett County.

Lady Crusaders win medley, 3200 relays, Johnson wins 100

HOT SPRINGS/KADOKA The 2007 high school track season is finally underway; Douglas postponed their Earlybird track meet twice and Hot Springs postponed theirs once and finally the first meets took place in Hot Springs and Kadoka on Tuesday.

Red Cloud's girl's 1600 medley relay team beat Custer by seven seconds to take the gold; Desirae Blacksmith, Josie Johnson, Ida Clark and Danielle Locust participated. Red Cloud came right back and won the girl's 3200 relay with Blacksmith, Clark, Saige Pourier and Laree Pourier, beating Crawford. Josie Johnson, a freshman at Red Cloud won the 100 in 13.2 and took third in the 200 with a 28.9. Saige Pourier was third in the 800.

Red Cloud boys took second to Custer in the 1600 medley relay with Art Vitalis, Christian McGhee, Dave Giago and Billy Scott; Red Cloud boys also took fifth in the 1600 relay with Art Vitalis, Dave Giago, Billy Scott and Wade O'Bryan running. Red Cloud's next track meet is in Belle Fourche on Saturday.

Pine Ridge took 12 athletes to Kadoka on Tuesday and had to brave cold, windy and wet conditions. Alex Pine took second to Takini's Kiko Mendoza in the 1600 and Jimmy Waln was fourth in the 110 hurdles. Pine Ridge will be back in Kadoka on Tuesday.

Lakota All Stars take 19th BJ Weston

PINE RIDGE - With eight points, five steals and five rebounds, Francis Around Him, tournament MVP, led the Lakota All Stars to a 35-23 win over the Lakota Pride last Sunday for the 10-12 year old division championship during the 19th annual BJ Weston Memorial Pee Wee basketball tournament in Pine Ridge.

Although the tournament has always featured co-ed teams, the Lakota All Stars triumph was the first time an all girls team had won a division in the 19 years of the BJ Weston tourney.

After being down early in the game, the All Stars tied it up at eight a piece in the second period and used a strong fourth quarter, outscoring the Lakota Pride 14-5 to break open a close game and earn the win. Paige Provost helped out with eight points and nine rebounds, Shaniah Richard added seven points and seven rebounds while Sharae Brewer chipped in six points and seven rebounds.

Steve Yellow Hawk came off the bench to lead the Pride with 11 points and Loren Ashley hit two threes and eight points.

Wakinyan took third and Double Trouble was fourth. Brook Pond earned the Ms. Hustle award, Adonis Saltes/Mr. Hustle, Ebert Long Soldier had the most threes in a game while Loren Ashley hit the most threes for the tourney.

All tourney awards went to Shaniah Richard, Sharae Brewer and Paige Provost/Lakota All Stars, Trevor Brave Bird, Steve Yellow Hawk and Jory Weston/Lakota Pride, Jacob Jumping Eagle and Alvin Janis/Double Trouble, Jeff LeBeau and Jacob Brewer/Wakinyan.

Christian McGhee opened the first quarter with a pair of threes and a two on his way to a team high 22 points and 10 assists in leading Red Cloud to a 86-65 win over the Untitled for the first ever 16-18 championship in this year's BJ Weston tourney. Red Cloud went up 19-14 after one and led 43-32 at the half. Lester Gotheridge hit for 16 points and grabbed 17 rebounds while Art Vitalis hit four threes and 14 points and Billy Scott chipped in nine points and 10 rebounds.

Michael Apple had a game high 24 points to lead the Untitled, Ty Lunderman helped with 16 points and Rod Richards added 10 points.

Code Blue was third while Running Sioux was fourth.

McGhee was selected as the MVP and won most threes in a game. Brice Hornbeck was Mr. Hustle and Lunderman had the most threes in the tourney. All tourney selections for the 16-18 division included Michael Apple, Jerad White Face, Rod Richard, Michael Jack, Travis Spotted War Bonnett, Brice Hornbeck, Dustin Shangreaux, Dave Giago, Lester Gotheridge and Billy Scott.

The Blue Boys went out quickly to a 27-13 lead over the Lakota Threat in the 13-15 division championship game at Pine Ridge high school but Jeremy Blacksmith led the Threat back to a 46-46 tie before the Blue Boys closed out the 50-48 win as MVP Carl Swallow took the ball from the half court line to the three point line and pulled up for a two point jumper at the buzzer for the win. Swallow hit for a game high 19 points, Kiley Weston added 14 and JD Plume cchipped in12 points and grabbed eight rebounds. Blacksmitrh led the Threat with 16 points and 10 rebounds, Emerson Bob Tail Bear helped with 10 points.

Sioux Runners took third while KT Ballers finished fourth.

Christian Janis earned Ms. Hustle, Kiley Weston was Mr. Hustle, Swallow had the most threes I a game and Lars Backward had the most threes in the tourney. All tourney selections included JD Plume, Truman Rossman and James Pine/Blue Boys, Alyssa Cottier, Jeremy Blacksmith and Joe Bissonette/Lakota Threat, Lars Backward, Aaron Long, Spur Pourier and Julian Fast Wolf.

The Little Saders scrapped their way to a 7-6 halftime lead in the 7-9 division but OST Finest came on strong in the second half to win the championship 16-9.

Jay Olivares led the way with six points while Lynette Cuny heled out with four points and eight rebounds. Dalton Lessert led the Little Saders with six points.

The Little Thorpes took third while the Wizards finished fourth. Koby O'Rourke was MVP, Lynette Cuny was named Ms. Hustle and Alehandro Rama was Mr. Hustle.

Easter Egg Tourney attracts 43 teams, over 500 participants

WOLF CREEK - "Anytime you are able to provide activities for over 500 children, you are moving in the right direction," said Easter Egg tournament coordinator Yvonne "Tiny" DeCory.

She said, "special thanks go to Wolf Creek School, the 21st Century Millenium program and ballplayers from the Divas and Wakinyan for helping to make the weekend a success."

Red Cloud knocked off Running Sioux 61-49 for the 16-18 title as Dave Giago lit it up with 22 points, four steals, five assists and nine rebounds and Lester Gotheridge helped with 20 points and 14 rebounds. Billy Scott was named MVP while the all star selections included Shilo Pierce, Jake Pond, Michael Jack, Hobart Locke, Dave Giago, Billy Scott, Art Vitalis and Lester Gotheridge.

The Blue Boys knocked off Running Sioux for the 13-15 championship. Carl Swallow was named MVP, Shauna Long was Ms. Hustle and all stars included Joe Bissonette, Jeremy Blacksmith, Dalton Buckman, Spur Pourier, Lars Backward, JD Plume, Kylie Weston, Tawnee Shay Hunter, Lyle Jacobs, JC Long Soldier and Carl Swallow.

Lakota All Stars knocked off the Lakota Pride Junior in the 10-12 championship game as Sharay Brewer was named MVP.

All stars included Trevor Brave Bird, Anthony Hopkins, Shania Richard, Francis Around Him, Adonis Saltes, Jeff LeBeau, Jacob Jumping Eagle, Francis Good Lance, Jacob Brown, Paige Provost and Ebert Long Soldier.

Lil Saders knocked off the Running Wizards for the 7-9 division championship and outstanding players included Shaylene Richards, Yamni Cournoyer, Kiya Provost, Aaron Black Bull, Tea LeBeau and Drew Espinoza.

Lil Saders won the six and under "small fry" division beating OST Finest and outstanding players included

DJ Vitalis, Jr., Alehandro Rama, Kateri Weston and Duece Martin.

Daylon Black Bull was the Knock Out champ while Jeff Pourier and Tre Goings were three quarter court champs.

Metcalf sentenced for stealing from domestic violence program

SIOUX FALLS (AP) - The former co-director of a South Dakota Coalition Against Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault office has been sentenced to prison for stealing thousands of dollars from the group.

Mary Metcalf, 48, of Sioux Falls earlier pleaded guilty in U.S. District Court in Sioux Falls to one count of theft from programs receiving federal funds. She was sentenced to 12 months and one day in federal prison, followed by three years of supervised release.

Finding My Voice

Why unci is special

Dana Lone Hill

Let's hear it for them, huh?

How many of you have one in your family or know of one raising grandkids?

I am sure almost everyone does. They care for their young like lions, well female lions. They are over-protective, aged with that Indian sense of humor and always come to the rescue for their grandchildren. Thank god for grandmothers.

I have my maternal and paternal grandmother still and "Indian way" I have many more. I am so lucky. My kids have their great grandmother on their dad's side.

What a rock she is. She is 77 years old, still works serving meals for the ederly, everyday. She is currently raising one grandkid and five great-grandkids.

You know she told me once, "I never had a life of my own, I always raised someone else's kids, but if I don't do it who will?

They are unsica (pitiful.)"

She walks with her head held high, she demands respect, not in a way where she tells you straight out to respect her, but her presence and her aura demand respect. I know I did her wrong once when I was helping make potato salad for some holiday and I drained all her pickle juice out of the pickles.

She didn't say anything but the looks she gave me, I knew I had to find some pickle juice ASAP. She is a strong woman, I don't know one of her grandkids that are not scared of her.

In fact one of her grandsons, and I witnessed this, once said "Gram, can I call you the Dalai Lama?"

She responded "What? Why would you call me that?"

"Because when you walk in a room, everyone bows down to you." he said smiling.

"You don't call me nothing but grandma!" she said with a curse word thrown in there. That wiped the smile off his face and he put his head down.

As soon as she went out of the room, we all laughed at him.

He did use a word to describe her, Matriarch.

I looked this term up and he's right. Wikipedia says The term is usually applied to the oldest female in an extended family, who by virtue of her position has a degree of granted authority because others have trust in her.

Now how many of us know women like that? Let's hear it for the uncis! (grandmothers.) If they didn't raise us, they sure had a hand in raising us. They passed on all their virtues of respect, heart, hope, humor, and most important of all love. To all my dozen or so grandma's reading this, I love you all. (I really should have saved this for Mother's Day! josh)

As for you gacas, (grandpas) I will be writing in the paper about you soon.

Dana Lone Hill is a 35-year old mother of 4, who recently moved back to the reservation, after an eternity on the housing waiting list. Although currently self-employed, she plans on continuing her education at the Oglala Lakota College.

A mother's plea for justice

Dear Editor:

I am asking help to FREE my son from an unfair and unjust 50-year sentence he is presently serving in the South Dakota State Penitentiary.

Throughout the 16 years he served in prison, he has filed appeals fighting burglary and robbery charges by raising arguments alleging Illegal Arrest, Ineffective Assistance of Counsel, Violations of his Constitutional Rights and Violations of South Dakota Law concerning Juveniles.

At the time of his arrest, my son was 16 years old when he was kidnapped from my home by two white detectives claiming his probation officer ordered his arrest despite the fact that he wasn't even on probation. He was shackled up and taken down to the local county jail were he was intimidated and coerced into false and incriminating statements against himself without the benefit of counsel or parental supervision.

In fact he was forced to write the statement three times before they were satisfied! I was not notified until hours after his illegal arrest and interrogation!

This grave injustice against my son is not uncommon in the racist State of South Dakota.

Like so many other of our young Native men and women currently struggling for Freedom across the country, my son was clearly and inarguably "Framed and Rail Roaded" into the system.

He is not a murderer, a rapist or a child molester!

Far less time is given to individuals for worst crimes in this state. Why do we allow this to happen to our people because they are Native?

What was the outcome of the committee who met in Pierre that was to address issues regarding the disparities affecting Native Americans incarcerated for longer sentences than non-Indians?

My son is going up for parole April 24, 2007 at 8 a.m. I am asking you, the People of the Lakota, Dakota and Nakota Nations, to please help me FREE my son from this injustice. I want my son home!

He was incarcerated illegally for 16 years and needs to be home with his family

Please help by:

*Being present at his parole hearing on April 24.

*Write a letter of support for David Arapahoe to the SDS Board of Pardons and Parole, P.O. Box 5911, Sioux Falls, SD 57117-5911, Attention: Ed Lightenburg or to our Native Parole Board member, Debra Flute

*Help with monetary funds for his Defense Committee

*Contact support organizations that can help

I know I speak for everyone with loved ones in the system. We need to work together to fight against the disparities and injustices placed on Native People.

BIA violates trust responsiblity in election process

Dear Editor:

I am a candidate for the office of the president of the Oglala Sioux Tribe. The Constitution of the Oglala Sioux Tribe cannot, by federal law, be inconsistent or in conflict with the Constitution of the United States. The Constitution of the United States mandates that elections will be conducted by a majority rule of the whole number of electors (voters), or 50.5 percent. On the Pine Ridge reservation, it is generous to say that there are approximately 40,000 members (2003 Census).

Of that 40,000, 60 percent are 18 years old and above. Which means that there are 24,000 whole electors. Of that 24,000, the Oglala Sioux Tribal election MUST have 12,001 voters to certify it's election. So, 4,000 votes cast represents less than 15 percent of the voting population. Tribal ordinances and resolutions have been illegally skewed to benefit a select few to maintain office at the convenience of their families, and the expense of the rest of the people who suffer in poverty.

This is called 'condition of servitude" and the Oglala Sioux Tribe cannot legally pass any resolution or law governing the people unless they at the very least, maintain 'majority rule." Otherwise, they are subjecting it's citizens to the same conditions as SLAVERY. There is no excuse for not conducting a proper election.

Federal background checks are mandatory, and the impeachment ordinance is a moot point since there is no re-election avenue for one who is impeached during their term. Besides that, the election process is conducted within the time frame of the same term. If they have been disqualified then there still has to be a run off of the two candidates.

Any and all tribal ordinances/resolutions inconsistent with federal law are considered to be a depredation upon the Oglala Sioux Tribe and the rest of the Great Sioux Nation members as stated in Article 3 of the Treaty of 1851: "The United States bind themselves to protect the aforesaid Indian Nations against the commission of all Depredations by the people of the United States."

By allowing the current president to attain the position of tribal president through default, the BIA once again violated it's trust responsibility to protect the individual members of the tribe. Futhermore, the very act of taking office unlawfully disqualifies him from the tribal election as a dishonest act.

Federal status 18USC 371 Conspiracy, 18USC-2(a) and (b) Aiding and Abetting, 18USC-3 Accessory after the Fact, 18USC-241 Conspiracy against the Right of Citizens, and 18USC-242 Deprevation of the Rights Under Color of Law, can all be applied to each and every individual who participated in the deception and certification of the 2006-07 tribal election. This includes members of the election committee, judges who certified the candidates, the candidates currently posing as officials, council lawyers, police officers who escorted White Plume from the building and the BIA official who confirmed the election certification. Sovereign immunity does not apply, and these individuals are not above the law.

The other candidates and myself are eligible to file a federal tort claim against the BIA and government under 28USC-71.

This is the very reasons that I and others decided to run for office to change these dysfunctional tactics used by people who continue to receive funds in the name of being "Indian." Yet what have any of them done for the Indian people?

Here are a couple of examples: The Supreme Court decision in 1980 regarding the Black Hills (Great Sioux Nation vs. United States) issued a monetary settlement regardless of whether we wanted it or not, which resulted in Presidential order from President Clinton mandating meaningful consultation with the Indian tribes. However, to date none of the tribes associated with that litigation have challenged that ruling. For one thing, the settlement should have been for continued lease of the 1868 territories and NOT FOR TITLE.

Another thing, there has never been, "just and proper compensation" given to the individual members of the Great Sioux Nation, as mandated by federal law.

This is why today's Cobell settlement is attaching a 'rider' stating that there will be no further claims against the Federal Government (I am absolutely OPPOSED TO THE COBELL SETTLEMENT AS IT STANDS) Secondly, how is it that 90-95 percent of our tribal programs are being administered by women. This is discriminatory on its face and yet as a 'tribe' our women are by tradition, keepers of the laws of God. This is where the oppression of the men and their role has been perpetuated.

Except for non Indians controlling the voice of the Lakota Nation, and the poor performance of the local radio station.

These things have been developed for years and we still have no real leaders to protect our children from the many depredations that plague our nation. No one resolution to protect us and re-enforce our treaty rights to land, housing, welfare, education and health care. Once again, the form of governing for the Great Sioux Nation is virtually non existent and yet our programs are continuing in the name of the federal identified individuals who carry a U-number.

The tribe enjoys tax exemption at our expense, the tribal council enjoys sovereign immunity at our expense. For these reasons, I have been encouraging per capita payments to the individual members of the Great Sioux Nation, so that

Traditional Indians never said, 'God is on our side'

By Tim Giago
(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Former Secretary of State Madeleine Albright, speaking about the religious convictions of President George W. Bush said, "I worked for two presidents who were men of faith and they did not make their religious views part of American policy."

She also said that when Bush speaks of his war commitment he says, "God is on our side. President Abraham Lincoln during the Civil War said, "We are on the side of God." I would think that the people of Islam would object to the comments of Dubya and the people of the Confederacy would certainly take exception to the comments of Lincoln.

Since this is Holy Week in the Christian world one can find its reflection even in the Sunday comics, or "Funny Pages" as we old timers used to say. Sunday's comic pages had strips from The Family Circus, Hi and Lois, For Better or Worse and all the way to B.C. containing references to the Bible and to Jesus Christ.

Radio and television commentator Bill O'Reilly is notorious for saying that "We are a Christian Nation," and he means this unequivocally to the near exclusion of all other faiths.

For those who are not Christians the two holidays that makes them feel like strangers in America are Easter and Christmas.

Nearly all-traditional Native Americans are at odds with the cultural and spiritual imperialism brought to this country from Europe that made their own religious convictions inferior and unacceptable to the devout Christian Pilgrims and the other Christian denominations that settled this land.

Christianity brought into play the concept of Manifest Destiny. This was the policy adopted by the new government of the United States that looked west for expansion and used the doctrine of Manifest Destiny as a weapon of growth for a young, Christian nation. According to Webster, manifest destiny is an ostensibly benevolent or necessary policy of imperialistic expansion.

In other words, the founders believed that it was decreed by God that they move west by whatever means even if it meant crushing and destroying the thousands of indigenous people already residing on the lands they coveted.

France planted flags in the territory that would be known as the Louisiana Purchase and claimed it as their own. They did not consult with the people of the many Indian nations already living on those lands since time immemorial. And then France turned around and in 1803 sold the land they did not own to the United States under the auspices of Thomas Jefferson.

We often joke in Indian country that perhaps we should now plant the flags of our sovereign Indian nations upon the lands stolen from us and reclaim it for our own. Of course, we also often joke about our lax immigration policy that allowed so many illegal immigrants to enter our country in the first place.

But jokes aside, it took a powerful religious bent starting with the Papal Bulls to Manifest Destiny to all but destroy the indigenous people of the Western Hemisphere.

During this Easter Week I think all Native Americans should go back to their roots and examine the costly programs of this Christian Nation that took away nearly all of their freedoms.

The thing most Americans fear is to have another nation impose its religious beliefs upon them or worse, to have one religion become so dominant that it can displace all of their religious convictions with its own set of beliefs.

Most Native Americans had no choice when it came to religion. The United States government divided the Indian reservations up like so many pieces of pie and different religious groups were given land to build churches and schools in order to indoctrinate through education. Children were oftentimes taken from their homes in the middle of the night and hauled away to these religious and state-run boarding schools. The policy of "Kill the Indian; Save the Child" was the pogrom intended to acculturate and assimilate those people the United States could not otherwise conquer.

Some portions of the program of cultural imperialism, particularly that portion handed over to the different church denominations, did work and as happened throughout the Americas under the Spanish invasion, thousands of Indians capitulated and became Christians. The Spaniards had a more liberal interpretation of "kill the Indian, save the child." They literally killed those standing in the way.

But always making a mockery of total success for the American government and the Church were those hardcore traditionalists who refused to be indoctrinated. Many of these so-called non-believers were considered to be "off the reservation" and were hunted down and killed. Those not killed outright were imprisoned. They were labeled as "renegade Indians" and outlaws.

Isn't it enlightening what a nation of Christians can do for the good of mankind?

Undeterred, these "renegades" took their traditional religious beliefs underground. Because of the relative isolation of Indian reservations, they found the sanctity to practice their beliefs away from the unforgiving and prying eyes of the federal government and its minions in the different church groups.

One should never forget that by making religion a part of its policy the United States forced its will and its religion upon the indigenous people of this continent. Although extremely spiritual in their own beliefs, the Indian people never said, not once, that, "We are on the side of God."

Those Indians labeled as renegades by the government survived and are now bringing back the traditional spirituality to the Native people. And those who turned their backs on the traditionalists are now scampering, while still clinging to their Christian beliefs, to include this "old" indigenous spirituality into their own Christian beliefs.

Well, they can't have it both ways.

Border towns present a certain risk for some

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

The traffic into Valentine, Neb. can be phenomenal on a Friday night. Many Rosebud residents make the trek for a variety of reasons. In a span of 30 minutes my son counted over 100 vehicles headed from the Rosebud reservation to Valentine. Who knows if they were headed for the casino, to the movies, or to shop.

We have a lot of teachers who commute to the Rosebud each day and it is likely that they make up some of that traffic.

We are notorious for patronizing such stores as ALCO, Henderson's and the Pizza Hut and those numbers probably go up during the first of the month.

If only those businesses could give back to Rosebud as much as we give them, but that's another topic for another day.

Who could forget the good food at Subway or the good desserts at Peppermill.

Rosebud reservation resident do have to be a little vigilante, however, and pay attention to the laws and ordinances as they make the 30 minute trip to Valentine or the 40 minute trip to Winner.

My sense is that less people tend to head east towards Winner as it is more distant and the area is known to have the highway patrol on the lookout for license plates with the number 67.

Over the years almost all of the motorists I have seen pulled over across the county line are tribal members with 67 plates and it always makes me defensive as some of our folks simply cannot be burdened with high fines if they have committed an infraction.

I see the reverse where many white folks traverse our reservation community at a high rate of speed without regard for our posted speeds and that is equally as frustrating to witness.

It can be a risky trip for some as insurance coverage has to be up to date, all tail lights must be intact, and all need to know that law enforcement is a bit more impersonal and strict.

In Indian Country we are all related and even law enforcement is sensitive to that connection and so we deal with each other with a bit more compassion than one might expect out in the Interstate or somewhere like that.

A couple of weeks ago, we saw a tribal member pulled over off the highway in Winner with 67 plates and it seemed odd that the highway patrol would venture into the heart of the city when that should be the domain of the municipal police.

In Valentine we saw a tribal member with 67 plates pulled over and surrounded by six police cruisers from the city and the county.

I thought that show of force was a little excessive and that is the kind of thing we need to watch for as tribal members who spend a lot of money in border towns.

The business relationship that has been engendered between tribal shoppers and border town businesses is one that is usually carried out without incidence despite the fact that in Winner some businesses did not take checks written on Todd County banks in the past.

I do have to acknowledge the fact that some businesses have genuinely reached out to Lakota people in an attempt to bridge any cultural divides.

The thing about Lakota shoppers is that they are rather sophisticated and know that their patronage can often make or break a business or at least get their attention.

As such then, we must all be aware of the specific ordinances and societal rules that govern our behavior when we patronage off-reservation border towns.

We know that there are risks, but there are also some great benefits to making our lives just a little more livable as we shop for bargains and perhaps a good meal.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) resides on the Rosebud with his son, Beaux. He earned a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) from Harvard University and is a 2006 Harvard AOCC Award recipient. A decorated Vietnam Veteran, he is functionally literate in Lakota and worked at Sinte Gleska University for 20 years as Dean/Chair of Tribal and Graduate Studies.

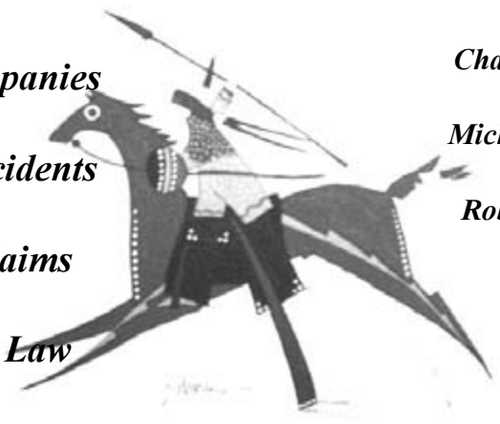
they will have the resources to defend themselves in this cut throat State of economic depression for the reservations. Will everybody please take the wax out of their ears.



And for the record, I was born in Pine Ridge as a member of the Great Sioux Nation. Not AIM or GOON. And if our children are half-breed and do not speak the language, that is a responsibility of the elders who have become racist against their own kind which is contrary to Lakol Wicohan. I do not cater to any of this, and I never will.

Blue Bird sentenced to 34 years for drug dealing

By Carson Walker
Associated Press

PINE RIDGE - In July 1999, when a sitting U.S. president visited an Indian reservation for the first time in 63 years, Geraldine Blue Bird was in the spotlight.

As he heard about conditions on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, one of the nation's poorest areas, President Clinton expressed amazement that Blue Bird lived with 27 members of her family in her dilapidated four-bedroom house and a trailer out back.

``Don't forget us,'' she implored.

After that well publicized visit, donations came in from around the country _ including a new trailer for Blue Bird.

Today, that light blue doublewide is boarded up, seized by federal agents. Nearly eight years after becoming a symbol of Pine Ridge's extreme poverty, Blue Bird was sentenced for one of its most common crimes: drug dealing.

Blue Bird, 51, was sentenced in Rapid City on Wednesday to 34 years in federal prison. She was convicted last fall of conspiracy to distribute cocaine, possession with intent to distribute cocaine, possession of a firearm in relation to drug trafficking and conspiracy to distribute marijuana.

She was ``pretty much the ringleader'' of a conspiracy based out of her home that trafficked an estimated $2 million worth of cocaine from Denver to Nebraska and South Dakota over three years, beginning in 2002, U.S. Attorney Marty Jackley said.

Twenty-eight people, including family members, have been indicted in the investigation. Most have pleaded guilty and several testified against the leaders, including Blue Bird.

In court Wednesday, Blue Bird minimized her role.

``I'm being held responsible for a lot of things I wasn't involved with,'' she said. ``There are things that I've been accused of and convicted of that I really didn't do.''

At the sentencing for Blue Bird's son, Colin Spotted Elk, in February, a 15-year-old boy who shot and killed another teenager at Blue Bird's home testified that he and other juveniles held money and distributed drugs for Blue Bird and Spotted Elk.

The boy said he helped break up marijuana that Spotted Elk sold and that he cut papers out of magazines that Blue Bird used to repackage cocaine for sale on the street.

Blue Bird's granddaughter Antonia Blue Bird, 26, lived in the old house that was the backdrop for Clinton visit when she was growing up, and moved back in after her grandmother was arrested.

Antonia Blue Bird said that despite dire poverty - she remembers having popcorn, oatmeal and Kool-Aid for meals - her grandmother still invited people in if they had no other place to go.

``She gave everybody food. She had a really big heart. She was a really nice person,'' she said. ``Maybe that's what triggered it _ not having enough money.''

Group seeks to keep state, Indian country free from uranium and radiation pollution

By Vicky Wicks
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY - A lawsuit filed by Defenders of the Black Hills to stop a Canadian company from testing for uranium was put on hold in Seventh Circuit Court on Thursday, April 5.

Judge Jack Delaney said the South Dakota Board of Minerals and Environment in Pierre has to have time to look at findings of an archaeological study of the proposed mining site.

Until that happens, Delaney cannot rule on other points of the Defenders' appeal of Powertech's permit to do test drilling north of Edgemont, in the southwest corner of the Black Hills.

Cindy Gillis, a Rapid City attorney representing the Defenders, asked Delaney to order that tribes be involved in the archaeological study, because tribes have burial grounds and historical and cultural sites throughout the Hills.

But Delaney said that was not within his jurisdiction. Delaney also declined to grant a preliminary injunction against Powertech to prevent them from drilling. Before an injunction could be imposed, all sides would have to have the opportunity to testify, and they were not prepared to do that on Thursday, Delaney said.

The archaeological study has been conducted by Mike Fosha, assistant state archaeologist, according to Roxanne Giedd, assistant attorney general. Fosha will testify before the minerals board at a hearing at 10 a.m. on April 19 at Department of Energy and Natural Resources in Pierre.

Giede said that plaintiffs in the lawsuit will have the opportunity to be heard at the hearing.

Delaney said the other issues in the lawsuit can be reopened after the board has reviewed the archaeological data.

However, Delaney did comment on one point of appeal: the plaintiffs' contention that the state board didn't give them enough time to get an attorney.

Notice of hearing was posted in October for the January meeting, Delaney pointed out, so plaintiffs' failure to get an attorney was not the board's fault. "How long do they have to wait?" Delaney asked.

Delaney also told Gillis that future filings would have to include identification of members of Defenders, as well as ACTion for the Environment, a Black Hills environmental activist group that joined into the lawsuit.

Charmaine White Face of Rapid City has headed up the Defenders' actions against uranium mining. Defenders members represent Rosebud, Cheyenne River, Standing Rock, Crow Creek, Lower Brule, Pine Ridge, and Yankton Sioux reservations, as well as various locations in the Hills.

Defenders of the Black Hills is asking tribal governments to declare reservations as nuclear free zones, to keep air and water free from uranium and radiation pollution. White Face said the resolutions would give tribal governments power and set an example for the rest of the state to follow.

Lakota Funds, small business development center work together to provide capital for entrepreneurs

KYLE - Donna Leavens, Regional Director of the South Dakota Small Business Development Center from Rapid City, and Ward Cheney District Director of SCORE came to the Lakota Funds in Kyle Tuesday April 3 and presented information about the services they can provide Pine Ridge Reservation entrepreneurs.

Wawokiye Business Institute Success Coaches in attendance were Tonia Young, David White Bull, and Jason Brave Heart. They were joined in the Tribal Business Information Center by Taffy Lafferty, Lakota Funds Loan Portfolio Manager and loan officer, Tony Taylor. Ivan Sorbel from the Pine Ridge Area Chamber of Commerce and local entrepreneurs Tilda and Mark St Pierre along with Lakota Funds Executive Director Dowell Caselli-Smith were also in attendance.

Levens provided information on the Small Business Administration 504 loan fund that her program administrates and that is available to reservation entrepreneurs. She also provided information on the SBA 7 (a) lending opportunities. Cheney presented information about how the retired executives from the area could team with WBI coaches to assist entrepreneurs in specific businesses.

Brave Heart drilled them with a lot of questions and then remarked, "This is really exciting. When they are ready we can now reach out to connect our clients with this high level of expertise and additional capital access." Mark St Pierre noted that, "having a mentor in a specific business could dramatically improve the possibilities of success."

Young noted that, "Clients who take the Core Four business planning course through Oglala Lakota College and work with a WBI coach will be prepared and anxious to connect with expertise like this. As coaches we can smooth the way for them and help them establish a good working relationship."

Lafferty suggested that the West River Centre be scheduled to come down on a regular schedule and the coaches could set up client appointments for them in advance. The coaches agreed and will be working with Leavens on a schedule of visits. Reservation entrepreneurs who feel they have their business idea well enough developed to benefit from this should contact the coaches at Lakota Funds (455-2500). This goes for those interested in SBA loan programs as well.

Lakota Funds staff will be making a return visit to the West River Small Business Development Center on the School of Mines campus April 30.

Their objective will be to establish a productive working relationship built on trust and solid information about the services available and how best to access them for Reservation entrepreneurs. The final goal for both parties is to bring a substantial increase in the amount of capital being effectively directed providing goods and services on the reservation.

ASK ANNA

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

It is evident that many, many tribal leaders have and continue to sell their people out for personal benefit. Since the fur-trappers came to the Great Sioux Nation, they attempted to figure out how to steal everything from the Lakota Oyate.

They tried to slaughter us, hang us, murder us, breed us out, and turn our Oyate in alcoholics, sexual abusers, addicts, and professional victims. America could not annihilate the Lakota and have found prisons as an effective extermination process.

Why do I say that our people are being sold out you ask, When criminals are allowed to run a tribal government, with no fear of prosecution and are allowed to use the government to retaliate against the Oyate, it doesn't get any clearer.

I believe that many of our tribal leaders have been working with the white government for far too many years and that is the reason the government will not prosecute those so-called "traditional" leaders... My question is, "What should the Sicangu Oyate do to rid themselves of that type of government" ?

Tribal member

Dear Tribal member:

(Please consider this answer not as an accusation that illegal activities are present in the current Sicangu administration - I am speaking of the three reservations (specifically) where I have personal experience and understanding - where I know of many injustices, some big and some not so big.):

Pray. That is first. Secondly, this is generational and has been fostered ever since, as you say the fur trappers came to the Great Sioux Nation: the sins of the fathers (so-to-speak) visited upon their sons.

The leaders that espouse to support traditional values often times forget the lessons they are teaching their children.

The United States government refuses in most instances to get involved as the Lakota Oyate are a separate and viable nation.

Involvement in local prosecutions for local crimes (not murder, but political crimes) is not within their scope of prosecution and would further violate the autonomy of the Lakota Nation. Therefore, that leaves only one alternative:

The People have to decide to investigate and prosecute.

The People have to make it unattractive to mis-distribute funds, utilize positions of authority for personal gain through favoritism and graft and use their personal titles to persecute and prosecute selected victims. Self-governing in and of itself implies the responsibility of a balanced government. Some of the solutions are easy: new constitutions that separate the power base - separation of the courts from the council - completely.

The judicial and the administrative functions of a government have to be separate or the problems continue to flourish - because its too easy to get away with it.

That's the government side of helping reduce political crime. The secondary solution is within the traditional values that your grandfathers used: Ostracism.

They used to put people out of the tribe. This is a difficult solution because of the vast gossip base. Truth is sometimes fogged over with emotionalism and exaggeration, not to mention blatant out and out lying about each other.

There is a saying: Absolute power corrupts absolutely.

That is why the council and the chairman or president of the council need the checks and balances of a good constitution and good governmental infrastructure.

Every person that I speak with will tell me they do not support a corrupt government, yet, the government is allowed to go on many times in an illegal way - sometimes not out of a direct desire to be criminals, but sometimes out of a desire to help their own family members.

Since, we all have compassion for our own family members it is better to eradicate the opportunity to use illegal and corrupt practices to help them.

A division of responsibility can begin to heal that; the rest, really, is up to each individual person to be honest and to Tunkisila, to answer the prayers of The People.

Dear Anna,

I am writing you to ask you a few questions. I have been with this guy off and on for about three years now and recently we been together for about four months, no break ups but he is away at this time and he thinks that I am doing something down here and I keep telling him that I am not.

I asked him what is he up to because he is accusing me of doing things but what I wanted to ask you is: Is he is up to something or what is going on?

I always tell him the one that accusing is the one that is doing something but what I want to know are we going to make it this time or are we both just wasting our time being together? Also recently my ex started to come around again what is going on with that, please help me because I am so confused .

Confused

Dear Confused:

Yes, you are wasting each other's time. You have never resolved any issues that were between you; and there is no trust. Why bother? Yip, yap, grumble, complain, accuse, anger, retaliation, ya da, ya da, ya da. Your ex wants sex, apparently he enjoys at least that with you. Don't expect a bad man to get better just because he has horns.

You will find a new mate in about three years - after you have had time to heal yourself from co-dependency and insecurity. He is worth the wait, and you need the healing or the same results will happen with the new man that has happened in the past. Life will get better, and so will the quality of man and relationship that you desire. Good Luck.

Dear Anna,

I love your column, and I thought your answers were very compassionate. I wonder if you can help with a couple of dilemmas? I guess my question is, do you see any location/state where I might be able to make a decent living?

I don't have many qualifications, just secretarial background and a therapeutic massage license. Looks like I can't make a living here where I am, and I have an opportunity to move to Florida this year to take care of my ailing parents. I could go to school and try to get a certificate or something but I haven't found my 'true passion' career and I guess I may never.

Not sure I can afford to live in Florida the rest of my life after my parents are gone though. Do you think I could make a decent living in North Carolina?

Looking for guidance

Dear Looking for Guidance

Big cities offer the best opportunity for financial opportunity. Florida is an excellent place for holistic healing skilled people. It takes a long time, however, to build clientele. I do see you going to school and I would look in areas of herbology and nutrition.

Those are informational skills that can lead you anywhere.

A massage license is a good thing; but specifically aimed for those people that want self-employment. It is rare to find an established health practice that will pay a decent livable wage to massage healers.

I know many successful massage therapists - and all of them work for themselves.

You can begin to build clientele while you live with your parents; before you have to pay rent. You can attend school at the same time.

Your "true passion" seems to be the desire to help others. That is a good trait, and you will find success after a few years of application. Blessings to you. Enjoy Florida - it's a beautiful place to call home.

Dear Anna,

How are you? I love reading your column and I like the advice and answers you give the people, so I was wondering if you can give me some advice or answers.

My mom has cancer, she had it for a long time now. She goes to sweats and ceremonies and she says it helps but I don't know if it does. Anna, do you see my mom getting better or what?

This boy and I used to go out and we went out for awhile, sometimes

I miss him though.

Do you think we will ever go back out or do you see us as old friends?

There are some girls who have been trying to fight my sister for a long time now and I wish that they would just leave us alone or hurry up and fight us, what do you think about all this?

Do you think I should just let it go, I mean they are just little girls right?

Looking for answers

Dear Looking for answers:

Yes, going to ceremonies and sweats has helped your mother. She might not be alive right now if she wasn't following this path. She has had a rough journey but she is holding her own and not sinking into despair.

I think she is wonderful and it doesn't help her for you to worry about her choices; you can help her the most through your personal support and prayers.

Your mom is better - but she needs more rest. Try and shoulder some of the responsibilities from home a little bit more for her.

I know you miss your ex boyfriend - but other than a possibility for a brief time back together it is over for now. Perhaps years from now you may consider each other as an option in life. You will have a new boyfriend soon - probably sometime in late May or early June.

The girls that are trying to fight your sister are basing their stupid and ungraceful plans over some even more stupid gossip.

It is something that one of the girls said that your sister said - about her and some boy. These girls are headed for far bigger trouble than you and your sister.

Try and avoid them. I see that is hard to do; so if they should approach you in the parking lot of the grocery store or the street use your cell phone and call for help.

You can email Anna Bee your questions at lakota1868@gwtc.net or fax to (605) 685-1870, or write to PO Box 386, Martin, S.D. 57551.

We thought of you with love today, but that is nothing new. We thought about you yesterday, and the day before that, too. We think of you in silence, and often speak your name. All we have are memories, and your picture in a frame. Your memory is our keepsake, with which we'll never part. God has you in his keeping, we have you in our hearts.

SHANNON COUNTY EMPLOYEE POLICY RESOLUTION #2007-03

WORK WEEK, OVERTIME PAY FOR HOLIDAY, AND FOR OVER 40 HOUR WORK WEEKS FOR HIGHWAY DEPT.-
Work week to be eight (8) hours, between 7:30 A.M. and 4.00 P.M., with one-half (1/2) hour for lunch, will constitute a day's work. Five (5) days, from Monday morning at 7:30 A.M. to Friday night at 4:00 P.M., will constitute a week's work.

OVERTIME -
All hours in excess of forty (40) hours each week shall be paid for at the rate of one and one-half (1 1/2) times the hourly rate. Work performed on Sunday and holidays will be paid for at the rate of two (2) times the hourly rate for hourly highway employees.

SICK LEAVE -
Employees who have completed sixty (60) days of employment shall be entitled to a half (1/2) day per month, six (6) days per year, sick leave for the first year of employment. Beginning with the second year of employment, the employee shall be entitled to one (1) day per month, twelve (12) days per year, sick leave, which can be used, to the extent the same is earned and accumulated at any time during the year. The foregoing leave, when granted, can be used for dental and eye treatment or surgery. If at any time the County should question the validity of the sickness or if sickness is more than 3 consecutive days, the employee shall be required to furnish adequate proof of actual sickness from a physician which the County may request from the employee. This provision applies to full time employees only.

The County shall pay two (2) times the hourly rate to the employees for the number of hours worked by the employees for the following holidays or days celebrated for these days
(1) New Years Day
(2) Martin Luther King Day
(3) Presidents Day
(4) Memorial Day
(5) Independence Day
(6) Labor Day
(7) Native American Day
(8) Veterans Day
(9) Thanksgiving Day
(10) Day after Thanksgiving
(11) Christmas Day
Any day designated by the Board of County Commissioners as a legal holiday

If the holiday falls on a Sunday, Monday will be the day observed as the holiday. If the holiday falls on a Saturday, Friday will be the day observed as the holiday. Holidays will be paid on a regular hourly wage rate to employees. Employees working on holidays will be paid at two (2) times the hourly rate.

VACATION -
For full-time employees on the payroll of the County as of January 1, 2007 the following vacation entitlements will apply:
After one (1) year of service---------- Six (6) days
After two (2) years of service ---------- twelve (12) days
After five (5) years of service ---------- fifteen (15) days
After ten (10) years of service ---------- eighteen (18) days

Vacation time will be pro-rated upon the discharge or termination of the employee. Vacation time can only be carried over for up to 80 hours maximum; any other vacation time will be lost if not used up by December 31st each year.

Highway Department employees have the option of working four (4) ten (10) hour days Monday through Thursday as their work week during the period that Daylight Savings Time is in effect.

PAYDAY:
Payday each month will be the next to the last working day of the month. PASSED AND APPROVED THIS 5TH DAY OF APRIL, 2007.

RETROED BACK TO JANUARY 1ST, 2007.

Westco------BID--$2.31 per gallon $2.36 per gallon Pine Ridge Oil NO BID NO BID Muddy Creek-----$2.44 per gallon $2.416 per gallon

Motion by Conroy, seconded by Rooks-Cook to approve Westco Bid for 300 gallon unleaded at $2.31 per gallon and 2000 gallons of Red Diesel at $2.36 per gallon, as low bid. All voting yes, the motion carried.

Public Comments: Jane Colhoff stated that the ads for Sheriff advertised as must be certified to apply for Sheriff. Lance Russell, States Attorney, was called into meeting. Two of the applicants were not certified. Deborah Rooks-Cook stated they didn't have to be certified, only certifiable.

People who were present were Judy Merdanian, Dian Keester, David Keester, Twila Merrill, LeeAnn Keester, Bernice White Hawk, Jeff Not Help Him and Russell Merdanian.

Jim Daggett commented that the State says you need to apply to the State if not certified so a back ground check can be done and the State can verify if a person can be certified.

Question was asked if qualification is for public record.

Lance Russell, States Attorney, stated he needed to speak to the Commissioners in executive session.

Russell Meridanian asked to speak and stated he had dealt with many soldiers, marines and others around the country, and wanted to speak his approval for Jim Daggett as Sheriff.

Motion by Rooks-Cook, seconded by Roubideaux to go into executive session, with Lance Russell, States Attorney, for legal issues, time being 11:58 a.m. All voting yes, the motion carried.

Came out at 12:14 p.m.

Tom Conroy, stated he was making a motion to appoint Jim Daggett, as Sheriff, seconded by Roubideaux. Voting Yes-Tom Conroy and Vanessa Roubideaux; Voting no Connie Whirlwind Horse, Deborah Rooks-Cook, and Inez White Hawk.

Motion by Rooks-Cook, seconded by White Hawk to appoint Jeff Not Help Him as Shannon County Sheriff. Voting Yes-Deborah Rooks-Cook, Connie Whirlwind Horse, Inez White Hawk; Voting No-Tom Conroy and Vanessa Roubideaux. Motion carried.

Conroy asked if Jeff Not Help Him was not certifiable, then what happens.

Lance Russell, States Attorney, stated there are procedures to follow and that if Jeff Not Help Him is gone for training, there will have to be a deputy to do the work.

Tom Conroy questioned as to when Jeff was to start work.

Lance Russell, stated that Jeff Not Help Him would have to go to the Academy and could be gone for up to 3 months.

Jeff Not Help Him was present again, time being 12:20 p.m.

Tom Conroy, asked Jeff questions on background check and whether he thought he could be certified. Jeff answered he thought he could.

Connie Whirlwind Horse, stated Jeff could start immediately.

Lance Russell, States Attorney, stated the problem is not having a letter from the State stating Jeff is certifiable. Russell told Commissioners that the motion they made should be amended to reflect this.

Connie Whirlwind Horse asked Jeff if he could find a Deputy while he was gone.

Jeff Not Help Him stated he thought he could pass the test and it would only take about 3 weeks.

Mrs. Bernice White Hawk asked to speak and starting speaking against Jim Daggett. Deborah Rooks-Cook, said there would be no accusing going on as Daggett had been voted out.

Judy Merdanian stated that she was a rancher and tax payer and she knows Jim Daggett to be an honest man.

Judy Merdanian also stated she was very disappointed in the Commission; they had a qualified Sheriff and didn't want to keep him.

Jane Colhoff stated she would see the Commission in Court.

Motion by Conroy, seconded by Roubideaux to adjourn meeting, time being 12:45 p.m. All voting yes, the motion carried.

SDHSAA deals out penalities to LWS in wake of State A fiasco

Brave Eagle

Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PIERRE - After a three and a half hour meeting in Pierre on Wednesday, the South Dakota High School Activities Association board placed the Little Wound boy's basketball program on one year probation for the 2007/08 school year and required the school to develop a sportsmanship program for both adults and students. An earlier motion to just require the development of the sportsmanship program failed by a vote of three for and five against; the motion adding the one year probation to the sportsmanship program passed 7-1.

"Overall, I think it was a little harsh," said Dana Brave Eagle, Little Wound high school principal, "but it will go a long ways to helping all of the adults involved with the boy's basketball program to establish and maintain a high quality program."

The SDHSAA is governed by an eight member board of directors who with a central staff direct and coordinate interscholastic activities between member schools. Activities include athletics, speech, music, student council and publications as the association works to equalize activity opportunities and standardize qualifications for participants, for coaching and directing procedures and treatment of visiting teams and participants in all activities. Currently the SDHSAA board includes Wally Bosch/ Yankton, Brad Olson/ Aberdeen, Tim Hadorn//Milbank, Larry Ball/Murdo, Bob Sittig/Baltic, Curt Hart/Alexandria, Christena Schultz/Bridgewater-Emery and Bryan Brewer/Pine Ridge.

For the board meeting, Brave Eagle was joined by Janice Richards/Little Wound School board chair, Everett Janis/board member, Linda Hunter/superintendent, Wilbur Ferguson/athletic director, Jamie Feather Earring/boy's basketball coach and Travis Brave Bird, assistant coach.

Kyle woman one of many in desperate need of home repair

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett
Times Editor

KYLE - Donna Peniska's family is in need of help. Her family lives in Kyle in a two bedroom home, owned by Donna's elderly mother, Myrnette Short Horn. The home is a former 'Igloo' home, that was acquired through the housing by the Short Horns during the 1970s.

Currently living in the home is Donna, her three children and her mother. They have lived there for two years with her mother. Because the home is not owned by the housing authority, they can't help with the repairs. Peniska said she has asked Medicine Root tribal council representatives for help, along with requests at the district and at the president's office in Pine Ridge and hasn't been able to get assistance.

There is a water leak in the kitchen and in the bathroom. When they use the water, it runs through the floorboards in the kitchen. In the bathroom, mold is growing on the walls from the moisture of leaking water. The home is small for the family but they manage to fit.

Peniska said it gets depressing to try to cope with the leaking water and damaged floorboards and leaking bathroom. She encourages her children and without anyplace else to go, they struggle with cleaning up the leaking water, the cold that seeps in from the door and windows that isn't properly insulated and a heating stove that doesn't work. The home is heated by the burners on the cooking range. She and her children often get headaches from the dry heat. Her three children ages, 11, 12 and 16 attend Little Wound School.

She wants to be able to provide a warm home for her children but doesn't have the funds to do so. She isn't financially stable to repair the home herself. She has been sanctioned from TANF and receives food stamps.

Peniska said she wanted to tell her story as she is desperate to fix her home for her children's sake and hopes that by telling her story someone would read her story and be able to help her fix her pipes, her heating stove and the poorly insulated doors and windows.

Donna Peniska's phone number is (605) 454-0086.

Austin Watkins, Medicine Root district council representative, has seen the Short Horn home and has been trying to find help for her. He said he has two other families in the same situation he has been trying to help.

Last month, Oglala Sioux Tribe's President John Steele testified before the oversight hearing on Indian housing before the Senate Committee on Indian Housing and stated the dire needs of residents that live on Pine Ridge reservation. He spoke to the committee of the Socio economic reasons for deeper sentencing

Brenda Boetel

RAPID CITY - American Indian defendants in South Dakota are more likely than whites to be sentenced to prison rather than serving probation, and their prison sentences are longer than those of white defendants, USD's Associate Professor Richard Braunstein said in his 2005 study of racial disparities in the state's criminal justice system.

But the reasons for the inequality are not racial, he said.

Some of the reasons underlying this fact are socioeconomic: "Poor, under-educated and under-employed defendants of both races received harsher treatment than better-situated defendants in the system," Braunstein said.

Poverty, lack of education, and unemployment plague American Indians more than they do whites, he said.

But legalities of crimes committed by Native defendants are also considered at time of sentencing: Native defendants are more likely to

Ditch clean up scheduled for Pine Ridge roadways

PINE RIDGE - Several organizations have been coordinating and combining their efforts to promote cleaner communities this month and next month.

To support their efforts, Oglala Sioux Tribe President John Yellow Bird Steele has signed a proclamation April 12 acknowledging April as "Month of the Child." The proclamation urges all tribal, Indian Health Service and Bureau of Indian Affairs and South Dakota state organizations to participate in scheduled events.

The document also urges communities and organizations to prevent littering in ditches and communities all year long. He declared April 23 as week of the child. Young people are a major resource on the reservation and as being caretakers of young Lakota people and the land, efforts will be made promote a cleaner environment for them and the land.

Bob Pille, director of the Environmental Protection Program, said in a recent youth survey, "The children brought out they wanted a cleaner reservation and environment."

Pille and others have coordinated their efforts to schedule cleanup, especially on the roadway ditches. Michael Catches Enemy, director of OST Natural overcrowding with the housing situation, the need for at least 3,000 homes and 300 are currently needed just for this next year. His testimony was reauthorizations of funds and how more funding is needed.

He spoke of the lack of home repair funds for the housing, which currently manages 1,700 homes some are in need of repair. He spoke of the outcomes that come from families living in such conditions as poor housing conditions, poverty and high unemployment. These conditions eventually lead to the social problems families experience such as domestic violence, depression and addiction.

Peniska's and her mother's home is just one of the many families in need of homes and home repair on the reservation.

Resources Regulatory Agency, said May 7 is considered Respect Water Day, which has already been a tribal ordinance. That day is a reminder of the importance of water. He said there will be clean up events taking place at Moccasin Park and White Clay Creek. He said the schools and Oglala Lakota College staff and students make efforts to participate in the clean up activities.

Mary Tobacco, the tribe's health educator, has listed the schedule of clean up events for the public to know and encourages community members to help. She said canvas bags were purchased to discourage the use of plastic garbage bags, which aren't biodegradable.

The month of the child schedule is as follows from Billy Mills Hall from 8 a.m. to 1:30 p.m.

Friday, April 20, Ditch Clean Up, Pine Ridge to Oglala

Friday, April 27, Ditch Clean Up, Pine Ridge to Oglala

Thursday, April 26, Youth Fair, Pine Ridge Village

Thursday, May 3, Youth Fair, Porcupine

Friday, May 4, Ditch Clean Up, Junction 18 to Sharp's Corner.

Parents are encouraged to attend the health fairs with their children, health educational materials will be provided.

All the efforts will work fantastic if we all entities work together, said Pille. Public Safety will provide help with the ditch clean ups along the roadways scheduled for meth materials. Apparently, people who manufacture meth sometimes dump their waste materials in ditches. Although that is not known to happen in the area, it is a safety precaution.

The clean up events are sponsored by OST Child Care, OST Health Education, Environmental Protection, OST Land Office, Public Safety, President John Steele Administration, Indian Health Services, Transportation, AATCHB Healthy Start, AATCHB Healthy Smiles, KILI Radio 90.1 FM, Oglala Sioux Tribal Programs.

have committed violence, to have caused injury to the victim, to have used a weapon, and to have been intoxicated at the time of the crime, Braunstein reported.

Although alcohol abuse is high for all defendants, Indian defendants are more likely than whites to have alcohol issues tied in with criminal behavior. Of Native defendants, 82.5 percent are intoxicated at the time of the crime, compared with 50.7 percent of white defendants, Braunstein said.

Kevin Krull, Chief Deputy State's Attorney for Pennington County, said, "If it wasn't for alcohol and meth, we'd probably have only three or four attorneys in this office instead of fifteen."

Need for treatment

"You have the classic dilemma, we're punishing people for conditions rather than crimes in the majority of cases," said Randal Connelly, a Rapid City attorney who has represented criminal defendants for 30 years.

Connelly believes very strongly in immediate chemical dependency treatment for most defendants in alcohol or drug-use cases.

There's a window of opportunity to reach people who are arrested while intoxicated, and "timing can be critical in the treatment process," Connelly said.

After arrest, a person faces loss of a job, driver's license, spouse, and freedom, and "those are fairly critical points in a person's life," he said. "If there's any hope for that person to come to grips with cause and effect … it's critical that help is there at that time. I'm not a counselor, but that's a fact."

Instead of building more prisons to warehouse addicts, Connelly said, he would like to see more residential treatment facilities to offset the problem of waiting lists and delays for admission.

Barriers to probation

Mike Stonefield, who recently retired as director of Pennington County Public Defenders Office, said defense attorneys, preparing for plea negotiations with the prosecutor, often try to determine what the defendant needs. "How you're going to get there might not be so obvious," he said.

Chemical abuse or addiction is the primary reason people get into trouble, Stonefield said, but there might be a need for counseling or treatment of other issues, "other paths you could put them on."

A young defendant could be steered toward Job Corps, or someone who commits theft might need treatment for gambling addiction, he said.

But treatment of the offender is not the only consideration in sentencing. Public safety and, if there was a victim, his or her state of mind at the time of the crime also come into consideration, Krull said.

"Society can't function if people aren't held accountable for what they do," he said.

If the offender "was willing and able to carry out a threat, behaved violently or recklessly, had a high blood alcohol content, used a knife or gun in commission of the crime, or has an extensive criminal history," Krull said, penitentiary time is more likely to be part of the sentence.

Stonefield agrees that some defendants aren't good candidates for probation and treatment. "That's part of the problem that any court is going to face, that there are people … who come in over and over - paint huffers, serious drunks with lots of DUIs - it seems there reaches a point that you just can't do anything with them. I think it's a small minority, but you really do just have to put them away for awhile" to protect society, he said.

Availability of treatment

Although the court and the state work on different bottom-line evaluations of poverty, it is fairly safe to say that indigent defendants who qualify for a public defender also qualify for chemical dependency treatment programs paid through the South Dakota Division of Drug and Alcohol Abuse.

At this time of year, however, treatment centers can run out of state and federal funding, as some have already this year, and it won't be replenished until June 1, Brenda Boetel, assistant director at City County Alcohol and Drug Programs in Rapid City, said.

A couple of facilities in the Black Hills are out of money right now, Boetel said, and "when treatment centers are out of money, they stop treating people."

Defendants needing treatment can be referred to treatment facilities on reservations or Indian Health Services, but Boetel said a shortage of beds and long waiting lists are problems there also.

City County also runs out of state money at times for treatment beds, but since it is also subsidized by both the city and county for detox beds, it continues to operate. "Our philosophy here is we're going to keep going. We're not going to turn somebody away because we're out of money," Boetel said.

Funding "becomes a balancing act at the end of a fiscal year," according to Robin Erz, assistant director with the division, which works to place indigent defendants in appropriate treatment facilities.

But if residential treatment beds are not available, other services such as detox, outpatient treatment, or individual counseling, can fill in the gap, Erz said. And if one area of the state is under financial duress, "we shift funds to meet the needs of the public," she said.

Brian Kanz, division program specialist, said if nonresidential treatment isn't adequate for the patient, the treatment facility needs to contact him for solutions. Kanz said he normally keeps his response time to 72 hours. "It's a matter of communication," he said.

Kanz pointed out that the division won't fund treatment for felony defendants facing prison until after they're sentenced; there are treatment programs in prison, paid for with state dollars, and state-paid treatment before prison would be a waste of resources.

As a private attorney, Connelly serves clients who are not indigent, but many don't have health insurance and aren't able to pay the cost of residential treatment.

"There's a significant number of people who need inpatient treatment, and it's not available," Connelly said. Even if a treatment center has a bed available, he said, the cost is prohibitive: a 28-day residential treatment program can cost $8,000 to $10,000, he said.

Although the residential treatment program at the Human Services Center at Yankton is a good program, it's a "nonentity" because of the waiting list, Connelly said. It can be months before a bed opens there, he said.

In the meantime "you look for stopgap alternatives just to keep [defendants] afloat," Connelly said. "It's like putting them in the hall of the hospital and hoping they don't bleed to death."

Local monitoring

A universally popular program in the criminal justice system is the 24/7 program, a system by which defendants report to City County to have their breath or bodily fluids tested to ensure they're not using alcohol or other drugs.

The program has been used in selected locations, including Pennington County, and earlier this year Attorney General Larry Long successfully asked the legislature to establish a statewide program.

Connelly called 24/7 "a godsend," and said that "an incredible number of clients say they love it - it reinforces their need to stay sober."

After defendants find sobriety, "They of their own initiative become more productive," Connelly said.

Stonefield said 24/7 as a sentencing option is "just a terrific idea." A number of his clients went through the program and were doing well. The threat of prison or jail reinforced their commitment to sobriety, he said; "This brings home pretty quickly to a person what's more important, to have four beers tonight or to have freedom."

"I would put it to clients that way," Stonefield said. "They would see it wasn't so complicated after all."

Socioeconomic solutions

"The unhappiness so many poor people live with is part of what pushes them toward crime," Stonefield said. Poverty also pushes people toward drugs and alcohol, which provide a temporary escape from reality, and when people are intoxicated, their inhibitions are lowered and "they do things they wouldn't do otherwise," he said.

"I don't have any doubt about that at all," Stonefield said.

Braunstein supports "greater knowledge of and empathy for" the socioeconomic conditions that are used as indicators of risk of offending, re-offending, and flight, and therefore account for disparate treatment of Native Americans in the criminal justice system.

He further suggests that the state's structural and economic policies should be examined to determine if they can reduce the impact of poverty and other non-legal factors.

"Through increased dialogue, productive reform, and further monitoring of the system, it is likely that conditions in South Dakota will improve," Braunstein said.

Following events that took place after the State A championship game in Rapid City on March 17, representatives from Little Wound were asked to attend the April board meeting in Pierre. St. Thomas More beat Little Wound 71-61 to win their second straight state championship; when the game was over, Little Wound's coaches and players left the floor and went to the locker room and when representatives of the SDHSAA including Bryan Brewer went to award the second place trophy and medals no one came out to accept the awards. Articles debating the issue appeared in the Rapid City Journal for days following the state tournament and what seemed to be a magical moment in local sports history pitting the Lakota Nation champ, Little Wound against the defending state champ, St. Thomas More before a packed house at the Rushmore Plaza Civic Center of 8,463 very vocal fans became the focus of a wide ranging discussion on sportsmanship, racism and respect.

"It really is about sportsmanship and respect all the way around, "said Brave Eagle, "in some of the discussions, it was the students and ballplayers who got the blame but during the board meeting, adults stepped up and took responsibility for not allowing the players to go out and receive their much deserved awards.

"We don't always realize how much pressure we put on these young players to win," said Eldon Marshall, White River boy's basketball coach, "the expectations to win at any costs are there every time we lace up the shoes and sometimes it is overwhelming to our players."

Marshall was one of several supporters who attended the board meeting in Pierre to provide support for the Little Wound team and to also emphasize that Native teams represent not only their community but also all of Indian Country as ambassadors of the Lakota Nation. Additional supporters in attendance included Jess Mendoza of Cheyenne Eagle Butte, Roger Bell/Takini, Dave Strain, Dave Hollenbeck and Craig Nowotny/St. Thomas More,Ted Rowland/Pine Ridge and Cody Russel/Lower Brule.

Probation will last one year and if there are any problems that come up during the probation year, Little Wound boy's basketball could lose any opportunity to participate in postseason play. Pine Ridge high school is in their second year of a school wide probation that covered all sports not just basketball, they had a problem with ineligible players this year in volleyball and lost out on the opportunity to participate in district competition following completion of the regular season.

"We are looking on the positive side of this unfortunate set of circumstances, we are going to move ahead and improve on a basketball program that is already one of the best in the state," said Brave Eagle, "and next week during a school wide assembly we are going to award the second place medals and the runner-up trophy to the Little Wound boy's basketball team who completed a great season this year."

Overview of the RST proposed gaming ordinance and its major features

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - In January a second reading of the RST amended gaming ordinance was held by the Rosebud Sioux tribal council and the accompanying RST resolution 2006-199 adopting the ordinance was submitted to the National Indian Gaming Commission. NIGC is governed by the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act of 1988. The previous RST gaming ordinance which was amended is listed as 87-03.

Without regard to the local issues which may surround implementation of the ordinance, an overview of selected portions of the ordinance is highlighted in order to provide a sense of its intent.

According to Mike Boltz, RST council representative from St. Francis, who is also a long time business owner, the current gaming ordinance is not dramatically different than the original version. However, he did point out that the inclusion of a board of directors and a review board may be added features of the newer ordinance.

There is a public service announcement calling for five new gaming commissioners to apply for the commission and it is likely that this issue is related to this relatively new ordinance. It is a point that will definitely require clarification as it is potentially confusing for tribal members. Current commission members will likely be allowed to apply if there is a new commission assembled.

Net revenue from tribal gaming may only be used to fund tribal government operations and programs, for the general welfare of the tribe and its members, to promote tribal economic development, to donate to charitable organizations and to help fund operations of local government agencies. These criteria are most likely self evident when the required annual is accomplished each year.

The board of directors as outlined in the ordinance has been previously authorized by RST tribal resolution and its formation appears to be forthcoming. Their role is spelled out in several non-regulatory functions including such functions as setting hours of operation to the approval of employee policies. The board requires three members and each one must have a degree or experience in several business related fields or knowledge of the Indian regulatory act.

The board of directors is appointed by the tribal council and the ordinance spells out four criteria which safeguard gaming operations from a conflict of interest.

The role of the gaming commission appears to complement that of the board of directors, as much of the criteria for suitability and length of appointment is similarly spelled out. However, the role of the gaming commission is regulatory and does not include the daily management of gaming operations.

The gaming commission's duties range from hiring, supervising gaming commission staff, to examining and monitoring all gaming activities, to issuing gaming licenses to all management officials and employees.

The terms of office for the gaming commission include one year for the Chair, subsequent three year terms for succeeding Chairmen, and the Vice-Chair and commissioners serving two year initial terms and then, three years terms after that.

There is also a list of ethical standards that both must agree to be bound by before taking office.

Finally, the board of review was established to serve as the final review for employee disputes, with the exception of actions taken by the gaming commission. Such disputes may include terminations, fines, or internal employee disputes.

OUR VIEWS

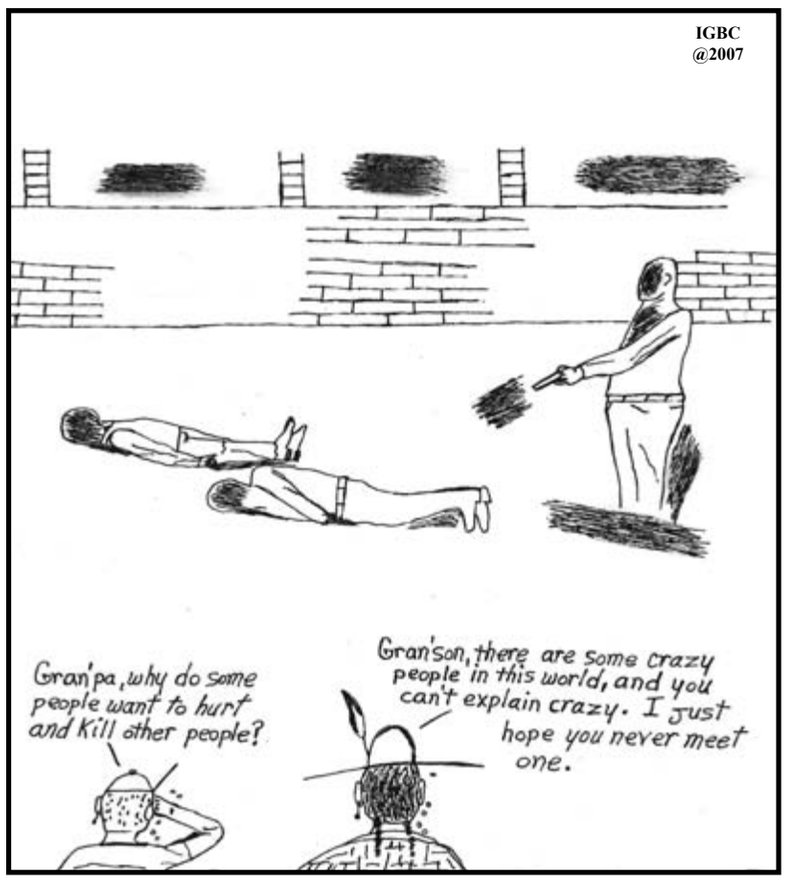
Where is the violence coming from?

The recent Virginia Tech shooting, "lockdown" at Todd County High School, the threat at Central High School in Rapid City plus the past violence in the schools including the killings at Red Lake High School in Chippewa country in the past five years is a sad reminder that the threat of violence reaches into the homes of all people no matter which community they reside in.

Often community members can be heard voicing their opinion that they hope someone does not show up with a gun and inflict violence upon our children.

As it is many children have already been traumatized by having to experience a lockdown scenario.

One Rosebud Sioux Tribe council representative explained to the police department yesterday in the council chambers that a couple of parents said their children were afraid to go back to school and had lost respect for law enforcement because of the manner in which the lockdown had occurred.



The officer responded that during such a threat law enforcement does not know who the shooter is and everyone in the building is considered a suspect.

Such scenarios are very real introductions for our young into the harsh reality of what is reflected by society at large.

There are many influences invading our reservations boundaries and such threats even those which originate within are scaring our children and changing the landscape of tribal culture and forever breaking down the wholesomeness which once was ours, including our tiwahes.

The morals and values of our youth come from family, from the parents, from caregivers, from grandparents, from those that help build their foundations. Maybe that is where we need to start pouring money to:

Building the strength of family power and structure back up .

Notes From Indian Country

Worrying that bone to death

By Tim Giago
(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

When I was a boy we lived in the Pine Ridge Reservation community of Kyle. My father, Tim, worked as a clerk and butcher for Chris Dam, a man who owned the local market.

One Sunday I found my father sitting on the steps at our house watching intently as our pet Bulldog, Butch, carried a large bone in his mouth that my dad brought home from his job as a butcher. Butch would dig a hole, place the bone in the hole, quickly cover it with dirt and then walk around the yard sniffing the air. He would then rush back to the hole he had just dug, dig up the bone, and find another spot to dig so he could re-bury the bone.

This activity went on for quite a long time as Butch repeated his activity and finally my father said, "That dog is going to worry that bone to death." His comment has come back to me several times over my lifetime because the term is so applicable to what is happening around us for as far back as I can remember.

When I watched the 24/7 news channels go on and on about Anna Nicole, my dad's comment came to mind. When I watched the media overkill on the Hurricane Katrina, the tsunami tragedy in the Pacific, and now the media strangulation of Don Imus, my father's words come back to me.

It seems that any event the mainstream media feels is newsworthy is an event that will be played over and over with slight variations until we finally just tune it out.

These media decisions are apparently made in some corporate office in New York City and the deciders seem to believe that whatever the easterners find newsworthy is a reflection of how the rest of America must feel. And that is totally wrong.

The Anna Nicole story played for about two issues on the inside page of our local daily here in Rapid City, SD and then it was gone.

I never saw one line about it in the Indian newspapers I read. But the bottom line is that we are not idiots. If there is a story the mainstream media finds intriguing, we read it, we understand it, and then we move on. We don't need to see it day after day, night after night, and hour after hour.

As much as the mainstream media would have you believe, we are not a nation of sheep.

What other news stories are being ignored while the MSM (mainstream media) pontificates and hyperventilates over stories of sensationalism?

The 24/7 news channels have clearly influenced the once staid network news channels to fall in line.

What used to pass as news is nearly unending "Infotainment."

Well, I and many other Americans do not want to be entertained by our news sources. We want the hardcore facts presented to us in an intelligent manner so that we can sift through them and make up our own minds about what it means to us.

This past week the two Reverends, Al and Jesse, showed up on nearly every news channel on the airwaves.

It is true that millions of other American, including me, detested the horrific comments made by Don Imus on his radio and television show. They were thoughtless, heartless, and racist.

But I do not need the media to use Al and Jesse to beat me over the head hour after hour. Believe it or not, most Americans are not racist and most of us went to the heart of this matter immediately.

I was in the news several years ago and my political situation caused Rush Limbaugh to make some comments about me on his radio show.

Because I am an American Indian, he chose to use an array of tired clichés such as "smoke signals, tipi, and powwow" to indicate how hip he was on Indian issues. Well, I do not live in a tipi or use smoke signals to communicate but I will admit to attending one or two powwows each year. It was just the idea that in order to define who I was, Limbaugh had to bring in what amounted to racist speculations to make a connection to me.

The MSM needs to get out of New York City and come out to the hinterlands to discover that there are folks out here that do not subscribe to their brand of news.

We read it or see it one time and that is enough. We do not want to, or need to, be literally inundated with news about Anna Nicole, Don Imus, or the two Reverends. They might even ask themselves if these stories are really news?

Didn't such stories used to be seen on Entertainment Tonight only?

The few times the Indian people of America see the national media is when there is something tragic or controversial happening.

Remember the hours of coverage at Wounded Knee II in 1973?

The media came, they saw, and then they left, never to return.

How many of you have ever wondered what happened in the aftermath of Wounded Knee II?

Remember the school shooting tragedy on the Red Lake Reservation in Minnesota? What happened at Red Lake after the tragedy?

These are stories that also need to be told.

Heading into an election year you can bet your boots that the MSM will find many bones to worry to death while we, the real mainstream, continue to turn off our television sets and radios sick and tired of a media that treats us like a bunch of thrill seeking idiots.

Did we bring this upon ourselves? Edward R. Murrow must be spinning in his grave.

Language is identity

Dear Editor:

There are four categories of youth on our Pine Ridge Reservation.

"Owakpamni oyanke ki lel leca icage ki okaspe tob unpi"

The four categories are as follows:

"Yukan okaspe topapi hena lena e pi:

He looks Lakota, but speaks only a limited surface English language. He does not live up to the white man's culture. Because he speaks English only, he missed out on the teachings from the sacred Lakota language that was given to the Lakota by the creator.

Umani Sni- Owanke ekta Lakota, eyas ecela hayakabyela wasicu iye. Wasicu ta wicoiye ki atayas yahloke sni. Wasicu hca wicoun ki he atayas owasiye sni. Ho nakun ecela wasicu iyapi ki heun Tunkasila Lakol iyapi wan ihanke waken ca unk'upi, he nakun ojula nansnan.

Because of our language erosion, our youth are in trouble. They are desperately trying to reconnect to spirituality but praying with our sacred pipe with the corrupted wasicu language is just not doing it.

The old ones are saying that is why many people are sick and dying too much dysfunctionalism.

"Gnunipi"- Lakol iyapi he gnuni unkayapi hetan hca leca icage ki onuniyata unpi. Tohanya okihilaka wasicu iyapi wan wowicasa sni na wamanupi ya a'ikoyake, he cannupa waken hel o'ikoyagye wacin wicoskan. Tankalake hena heyapi tanyasni ya cannupa wan yuha skatapi ca heun otahci unkujapi na t'a unkayapi. Icabsayakel wicoun.

Because they speak a language that is foreign to the sacred ipe, they lost their reverence for Grandmother Earth. They discard their trash in the highway ditches and anywhere in their housing area. They no longer live in harmony with Grandmother Earth.

"Wo'ohola hetan ipayeh iyayapi"- Icin wasicu iyapi canke takuya Lakota ki lila waken kilapi hena yuwaikceyapi. Unci Maka ekta a'iunkoyakapu ki he ojula nansnanpil. Ho, heca un canku oskokpa nains wicoti hena tuktetukakes wahpaye sica hena ehpeyapi. Tuweni Unci Maka ahokipapi sni.

New agers that come from the well to do families are seemingly okay. They are very responsible and do well in school. They don't know what life is like to live in poverty. Their parents have high paying jobs and usually have cattle.

"Igluhake"- Tecaya tiwahe o'ic'hipi etan upi hena tanyan wicoun s'elececa. O'ic'iye wacinpi na owayawa ekta onajin tawapi ki waste, Takuni ikakijapi sni na wahpanilya wicoun ki he slolyapi sni. Hunku na at'kukupi ki wowasi ya wankapa wokajuju hena eca yuhapi. Iyuha kinil pte yuhapi.

New standard of bilingual fluency

Dear Editor:

Writing from a standard of bilingual and biliterate Lakota-English fluency is a new axiom in commenting about especially Lakota and/or English culture. There is a difference in this type of expression because one can check with the other to get better insights and although there are many similarities as well as huge differences - this dual interaction and process yields depth as well as vigor.

And it makes for a more interesting, varied and freer environment in which to bring forth inclusive understanding of the false barriers that divide people today.

Lakota language suppression did not succeed so we are now free to bring back he knowledge of Unci Maka Grandmother Earth, Woawanyanke government, Wowasi work, and many other areas of essential information.

Thus, the following is not brought forth as a matter of argument but to reveal information as to how the Titunwun Lakota maintained their social order and spiritual life as well.

The Lakota title to this last segment is:

Wowahokunkiye

Waniyetu Ota kin hena wicagluonihan po! Nihun na Niyate kin wicagluonihan po! Ti wicakte sni yo! Wasicihaha sni yo! Wamanu sni yo! Wicakesni Waya-atanin sni yo! Wa asin sni yo! Wakantanka Tunkasila cekiya po!

Counsel of morality and of the Spirit

Those of many winters-honor them!

Your mother and your father - respect and honor them!

Do no murder! Do no adultery! Do not steal! Do not bear false witness! Do not covet!

Pray to Grandfather, the Creator God!

The above is also written manually using the original Titunwun Lakota Alphabet of 41 letters copyrighted in 1982.

There is no typewriter yet with the distinctive circle, half-circle designs of the Lakota alphabet.

Conflicts in society

Dr. Jim Wilson
Special to the Times

Recent headlines concerning societal disparities, again momentarily, have our attention. Implications beg the question of why those Sioux Indians just can't or won't be like us?

They won't be farmers on hardscrabble land even Homesteaders found inhospitable and no manufacturer would risk his own money on, they won't stay in school to get an education clearly designed for world economic competition in urban employment settings, they join the military in disproportionate numbers but many receive less-than-honorable discharges, they crowd the jails and prisons and keep the cops busy around the clock both on the Reservations and in our small towns and cities, and they kill themselves with alcohol, drugs, knives, cars, guns and ropes.

There isn't much argument that there are ongoing conflicts between the various Sioux Tribes and their surrounding neighbors, but too many people attribute the current negative consequences to group reactions to bad federal and state government policies. A quick glance back at some other groups will help us better understand that there also are other significant factors at work.

Central governments have often adopted policies harmful to minority groups; remember the Pilgrims, the farmers, the sheep-men, the German and Polish Jews, the Japanese-Americans, the German-Americans? The framers of the US Constitution warned of the tyranny of the majority.

My argument is not with government-to-government conflict; it is with the leadership of any society that fails to prepare and unite itself in the face of clear and present danger from outside that group which pretends to remain autonomous (Sovereign). Government-to-government conflicts play themselves out in processes involving two, or more, sets of representative agents (or belligerents, if you will) while societal conflicts are internal within a single society. Defining and sustaining a culture or a society is a principal function of its leadership.

The basic (internal) societal conflict may arise from many causes (cause and effect) but there is always one common factor: an individual who sparks the fire. Looking at two divergent types of social setting in the overlapping spectrum of society in which each of us might find ourselves may help us better see the bases of some conflicts.

In the basic Traditional setting we see individual behaviors largely sublimated to the perceived good of the group (family, community, etc.) and therefore, any self-caused or external endangerment to any member is endangerment of the group.

And, likewise, any individual advancement or improvement accrues to the greater good of the group. The Traditional setting is most likely to be found in rural or small town and city areas with relatively sparse populations. The primary reasons for maintaining traditions are survival of the group and continued benefits derived from the ongoing presence of the contributing members.

In the basic Non-traditional setting we see individuals expressing a high degree of individual preference and behavior.

The individual may be very mobile, belonging to different groups at different times for a variety of reasons or perceived needs. The individuals may, or may not, develop specialized skills or perform any non-replicable tasks and his absence or presence has little impact on group survival. The primary reasons for maintaining membership are maintenance or growth of political or economic benefits for the individual and continued highest and best use of resources committed to the tasks at hand chosen by the leadership.

It is not difficult to see that many individuals might find themselves in conflict at various times with either of these divergent groupings, but surely (one presumes) everyone can find a place of comfort somewhere in between. The processes of instilling comprehension and self-adopted roles in the larger society we define as an education system.

And, ultimately, finding a rewarding role to play in society is what each of us hopes to achieve. But, to find so many in conflict at all times is to tell us that there is a structural problem with the system. And that realization leads us to ask who defines the system, who applies the system and how vigorously the system is applied.

Before proceeding, in honor of disclosure, let me share that I am an enrolled member of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, that I was born in the BIA hospital in Pine Ridge, that I spent 11 years in a BIA Boarding School and graduated there from, that I spent four years in the USN, that I am a life member of the Mt. Rushmore VFW, that I used the GI Bill to go to college, and lastly, that I do have an attitude: I strongly believe that we can as Sioux Indians preserve and grow a magnificent cultural and political tribal life with a positive role for every individual while fully participating in the larger American economic and political life.

Defining and sustaining a culture is a form of Nationalism presumed to be positive, but we have seen many abuses. Indian tribes in America have adapted in many ways. Some have shown more willingness to give up tribal ways than others, but there is little evidence that giving up a cultural heritage assures worldly success or that sustaining and growing a cultural identity precludes a worldly success. In other words, it seems that what matters most is the unity of the society.

In all societies we see individuals who seek to spark the fires which will burn the houses of political opponents while their own stature grows. And, these individuals frequently attract those who feel left out or ignored. Understanding these things should give us reason to abandon policies which exclude participation and encourage those policies which expand inclusion. But it is not enough to adopt these general principles; we must actively pursue from the moment of birth the importance of the contributions of the individual to the greater good of the society into which he is born, and we must continuously remind of the harm done the society by both harmful acts and failure to intentionally improve one's personal value to the society.

Platitudes and generalities make good press, but what must be done to change direction when we do see the problem? You can't snap your fingers and make habits and addictions disappear, you can't order people to change overnight and you can't change policies every Monday morning. If we remember the old saying about idle hands we know we must put people to work, for believe it or not, work breeds the work ethic. Visible, paid work is the most valuable work because it has multiple benefits; it precludes other things from happening, it shows young people that work is good, it may bring personal economic benefits and community pride.

And, in almost every case it costs less than any alternative.

Visible, unpaid community work is next in value because it helps the community provide services and facilities, but its greatest value is in the sense of community that it creates. And every child must have a job.

That job is getting educated!

Finally, there are institutions to be built which are most effective when they rise from the sweat and tears of the stakeholders who struggle for their birth and growth and which will employ our educated children.

When people are busy, shoulder to shoulder, with their neighbors, building their own societies there is little time for conflict. Watching a parent or child go to work every workday is rewarding.

Could I have pre-diabetes?

Most people don't know if they have pre-diabetes. You could have prediabetes if:

- Someone in your family has diabetes.
- You weigh more than you should
- You had diabetes while you were pregnant (called gestational diabetes)
- You had a baby weighing over 9 lbs. at birth
- A doctor or nurse has said to you that you had a "touch of sugar" or "pre-diabetes"

Chess championship seeks monetary help

PINE RIDGE - Latisha Leftwich, a 7th grader at the Pierre Indian Learning Center placed in the K-12 category at the South Dakota Girls Championship chess tournament. She earned the opportunity to be sponsored by the South Dakota Chess Association and sent to the Susan Polgar National Open for girls where she would represent South Dakota in the tournament. This tournament is held in conjunction with the U.S. Open July 28 at Cherry Hill, N.J. The state and national organizations contribute a total of $500 toward her expenses. Latisha is looking for donations to help offset expenses.

Donations can be sent to Elizabeth Rowland, Box 1552, Pine Ridge, S.D. 57770. Call 867-2418 or 391-9222.

Blue Bird files appeal

SIOUX FALLS (AP) - Geraldine Blue Bird of Rapid City, who was sentenced to 34 years in federal prison for several drug convictions earlier this month, has filed an appeal to the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Her notice of appeal was filed in U.S. District Court in Rapid City on April 4 the same day she received her sentence.

Blue Bird, 51, was convicted last fall of conspiracy to distribute cocaine, possession with intent to distribute cocaine, possession of a firearm in relation to drug trafficking and conspiracy to distribute marijuana.

Prosecutors said Blue Bird hosted a conspiracy that trafficked an estimated $2 million worth of cocaine from Denver to Nebraska and South Dakota over three years. Twenty-eight people, including family members, were indicted. Most have pleaded guilty, and several testified against the leaders, including Blue Bird.

During her sentencing, Blue Bird said she was being held responsible for many things she didn't do.

Eight summers ago, President Bill Clinton honored Blue Bird for taking in people who needed a meal or a place to stay despite her own poverty. Twenty-eight adults and children lived in her four-room, dilapidated house and in a trailer when Clinton's visit made her a symbol of the desperate conditions on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation.

After the presidential visit, donations came pouring in and Blue Bird got a new doublewide trailer as a result. The light blue house in Pine Ridge was seized by federal agents and now sits unoccupied and boarded up.

Blue Bird's sentencing had been delayed several times because she had been in the hospital.

Her son, Colin Spotted Elk, 26, was sentenced in February to 29 years for his part.

In memory of Peter James DeNoyer

An Easter letter to a son from his mother

My dear precious son-Peter James DeNoyer

I was dreading EASTER but it came and left successfully. Thanks to your big brother-Shane and his wife Renee who brought your sister - Shannon and her family along, which made it all possible. Darrel and I work up at the crack of dawn and burn some sage and said our prayers.

Then we prepared a huge dinner with all your favorites, especially your Aunt Arlene' corn casserole. We went through all your pictures since you were a baby until now.

We talked and laughed about things you said and did. We love and miss you so much.

We made it through this holiday with hugs and a few tears but we also know you were with us helping us stay strong. Your death should never have happened so I have to ask the heart breaking question-Why? A friend of ours (Sonny Sky Hawk) told me that we all have a purpose here on earth and when we fulfill that purpose then it's our time to go, so what ever your purpose was son, I pray that people who knew you will remember it.

An elderly man here in Mitchell remembers you walking by his place and offered to finish shoveling his sidewalk for him. He said he's been shoveling snow off his sidewalk for years and you were the first to ever to offer help. I'm so proud to hear things like this son because that means I did well raising you to show respect. I pray the ones who knew you will honor that respect and talk only positive things that has happened.

I am so thankful to know you are leaving behind a future grandchild for us to love and cherish. We will make sure your child knows everything there is to know about you and how much you loved this child even before it was born. Your child will always be a part of our lives. You take care Pete and watch over us until the day we will be together.

Love, your Mother, Flora Watts Semmler

In loving memory of Duane C. Two Bulls

It's all ready been a year since you left us.

You left unexpectedly. It's still hard to believe that your gone.

It still seems like yesterday you were here at grams house making coffee in the morning. Everybody misses you truly. But we all know your somewhere

In a safer place watching over everybody. That was keeps grandma still Going, knowing that your in a better place..

We miss you and love you a lot.

Your family in Kyle

ASK ANNA

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

Hello again, hope all is well and I was wondering about some money that I lost or was it stolen? If so, who found it? Someone who was with me that day? I wonder what's in store for myself and my children's future? I am a single mother who wants to do good but it seems I just can't find a job.

Will I get one soon? Also I have been getting sick for no reason, is there anything I should or shouldn't be doing? I also want to know if the one I am with is my soul mate or will I meet him soon? How does he look? Thank you and blessings to you.

Needs to Know

Dear Needs to Know:

The money was taken. I see a so-called friend misappropriating it. I believe that within a few days of it being "lost" she actually offered to buy you something with your own money. Please stay away from people who use drugs.

You will get a job just before summer. I see a trailer - so it is some program that operates out of one. It looks as though it may be a summer program for youth.

Please drink bottled water. It seems that there is some aggravate in the water that has been causing mild stomach upset.

Soul mate? Well if he is, you probably wouldn't be looking for the next guy.

When you have straightened out your life and know that you can take care of yourself the "soul mate" you have been looking for will appear. That is probably quite a while away from now. He is about a half of a head taller than you, a little chubby, and has a great smile. Good Luck!

Dear Anna,

I love your column and advice. Can you share and/or shed some light on my life?

I've been through heck and back and I am still smiling and loving with all that life has brought my way.

When do you see me getting a new job and/or what more do I have to do to bring this in for myself and others? Is there or will I ever meet Mr. Wonderful, if so when?

Light Hearted

Dear Light Hearted:

You will be applying for and getting a new job in the fall. You just have to wait until it is created.

To bring good things in your life takes a lot of faith. You are positive and that is the biggest part of creating positive things.

Being grateful for today makes tomorrow that much better. You have the right idea. Loving life brings more life that is easy to love. It helps to visualize what you want and see yourself exactly as you want yourself to be. If you can't decide what that is at least go with the feeling that the success you want to have in your life will bring you. Carry that and combine it with prayer: the result will be opportunity and manifestation.

Dear Anna,

I read your column weekly, it is very interesting to read. I have been thinking about this for some time now, should I write or not. My curiosity got the best of me so here goes;

I lost a special loved person close to me a few months back. How is she?

There are so many questions I need answers for. You can probably read my mind before I ask them, so go ahead and answer them if you can, I'll be waiting.

Right at this time, my family is going through a hard time.

What do you see for us? I am so confused and hurt about my place of employment and the people who have the power to do whatever they want with our lives. Will I continue my work there or is it time for me to move on? If I have to move on, where and when do you see me at? What about my family?

We have a little granddaughter who tries to talk to me, but I don't understand what she is saying. Can you help there too! I do believe that she has some kind of ESP or something, does she?

I pray alot but sometimes it seems like it don't help me. Or when I am going through a hard time, I don't feel like praying.

I wish you good health and a good long life, we need you here to help us. Thank you.

Dear having a hard time:

Hang in there with work until the end of your term. There are people there that are trying to cast a shadow over your life - and so that does make things a little difficult for you.

You bring the children what they need: cultural recovery and identity. This is in alignment with the highest good for the children, and is also in alignment with the healing of the Lakota people.

I would look for another job in the future. It is very upsetting to work where your good work is not given acknowledgment in a positive way. It takes away from your spirit and is detrimental to your health.

The people that are involved do not truly understand what they are doing - or they wouldn't be doing it. There is bad "karma" involved when they disrupt what is healing for personal reasons. I wouldn't want to be them.

I see that loved one is doing fine. She has completed her journey but still visits you from time to time. Please let go of your grief. It only hurts you and affects her with concern over your own healing. In some ways it makes it difficult for her to move one.

Death is the natural order of things - and the Creator does not punish us with death but rather graduates us to a better understanding and more beautiful love than we here on earth can imagine.

Your grief then, is not for her, who is fine, but becomes for yourself for not having her here. Let her "live" in joy in the Spirit world - by blessing her journey with love and joy for her. Remember, someday she will greet you when it is your time and walk you through. You wouldn't want to be held back when you leave by irreconcilable grief from your relatives; rather, you would like them to miss you, remember you, and let you go on easily. Bottom line - there is no worry for your loved one who still is a wonderful woman, there is just the missing of her.

Time and prayer will help you heal and adjust. You will see her again someday and she will still visit you from time to time - even in your dreams. God Bless.

Dear Anna,

I've had ceremonies done in the past and was told I am a gift to my people. A medicine man told me I have to speak and write my language before a dream is sent to me.

My problem is I can't seem to learn the language. I feel something is holding me back or blocking me from learning it.

Any assistance would be greatly appreciated.

Somebody throw me a bone!

Dear Boneless:

Relax. It is just your fear that you cannot learn that creates the block. Quit worrying about how you sound and about all the mispronouncing.

Use the old flashcard method and when you are driving by yourself begin to translate everything you see into Lakota.

Take your time, there is no hurry and I see you ready for your medicine journey within about a year and a half.

He Huni Waste.

AZ The REZ Turns... By Connie Blanco

This is what marriage is all about

REZ HUMOR

The old Indian man ordered one hamburger, one order of French fries and one drink. Then he unwrapped the plain hamburger and carefully cut it in half.

He placed one half in front of his wife. He then carefully counted out the French fries, dividing them into two piles and neatly placed one pile in front of his wife.

He took a sip of the drink, his wife took a sip and then set the cup down between them. As he began to eat his few bites of hamburger, the people around them kept looking over and whispering.

You could tell they were thinking, "That poor old Indian couple - all they can afford is one meal for the two of them."

As the man began to eat his fries a young man came to the table. He politely offered to buy another meal for the old couple. The old Indian man said they were just fine - They were used to sharing everything.

The surrounding people noticed the little old lady hadn't eaten a bite.

She sat there watching her husband eat and occasionally taking turns sipping the drink.

Again the young man came over and begged them to let him buy another meal for them. This time the old woman said "No, thank you, we are used to sharing everything."

As the old man finished and was wiping his face neatly with the napkin, the young man again came over to the little old Indian lady who had yet to eat a single bite of food and asked "What is it you are waiting for?"

She answered

"The teeth."

Wanblee receives $75,441 grant to build ambulance facility

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

WANBLEE - After several years of dedicated perseverance and having labored over the course of five tribal administrations, the community of Wanblee will finally realize its dream of building an ambulance facility that will house emergency medical technicians and ambulance drivers around the clock.

At present, there is one tribally operated ambulance that must travel 220 round trip miles in order to transport tribal members to the Pine Ridge Indian Health Service facility. The Wanblee Health Center, administered by Francine Red Willow, is a satellite clinic and provides ambulatory care only and its hours of operation are from 7:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. It is not staffed to provide emergency care. Red Willow speaking of the new ambulance facility said, "There will be an opportunity for training and holding EMT classes here. Eventually, there will be a helipad built here."

The ambulance which is leased from GSA is housed on a temporary basis at the Emmanuel Mission in what is known as the older part of Wanblee. There is a new subdivision located east of town that is also served by the ambulance service.

Angelita Between Lodges was very gracious in sharing some of her 17 years of emer-

Deadline looming for tribes to 'stand up' sex offender registry

ROSEBUD - The Rosebud Sioux Tribe is in the process of a discussion as to the required formal compliance or "opting in" to the Adam Walsh Child Protection and Safety Act which was signed by President Bush on July 27, 2006. Pat Ragsdale, Director of the Bureau of Indian Affairs sent notice to tribes last November 30, 2006 in which he writes that Title I of the act revises national standards for sex offender registration and notification.

The most eminent threat to a tribe's sovereign status is contained in a paragraph which reads, "If a tribe does not make an election to function as a registration jurisdiction by July 27, 2007, then it will be deemed by federal law to have delegated this function to the state or states in which the tribe is located."

This will have to be weighed with the fact that most tribe's are not doing as efficiently as the states are in reporting and sharing information and this may be putting some communities at risk.

This is primarily because of the fact that states have been carrying out this function longer than most tribes.

As a matter of fact, the Rosebud Sioux Tribe is also ahead of most other tribes in accomplishing this task.

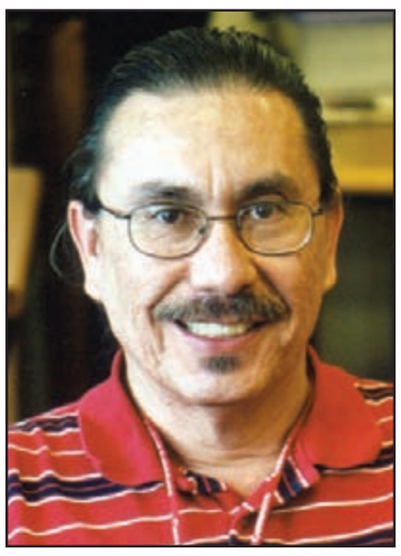
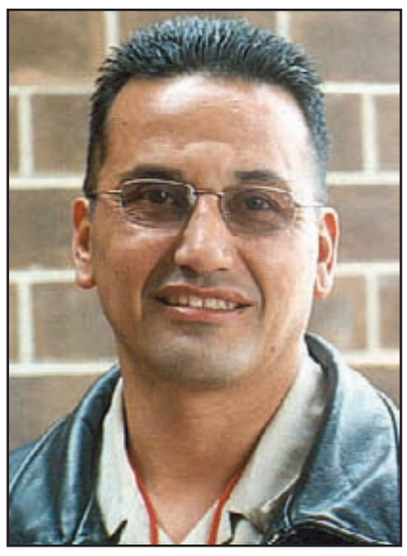
Why do juveniles lose hope?

By Vicky Wicks
Times Correspondent



RAPID CITY-Ralph Knickrehm starts every morning of the workweek by picking up four students who have no other way to get to school.



The rest of the day, he works with at-risk middle-school students to try to keep them engaged in school, keeps track of them to make sure they're attending class, and talks with students with upcoming court appearances to make sure they know what to expect.

Knickrehm fills one of two prevention facilitator positions created in the Rapid City school system with $80,000 in federal funding to address the disproportionate number of minority juveniles who get into trouble with the law.

According to state Department of Corrections statistics, the arrest rate for American Indian juveniles is 2.39 times higher than the arrest rate for white juveniles.

Rapid City Police Lt. Doug Thrash said disproportionate numbers of minority juveniles throughout the criminal justice system begin with arrests. "That's where it starts, and it never corrects itself," he said.

The best way to prevent disparity is to prevent juveniles from being arrested, Thrash said. To that end, DOC appointed the Disproportionate Minority Contact work group, a subcommittee of 71 Rapid City-area people who serve with varying levels of involvement.

"We are of one mind," Thrash said. "We have to prevent issues that bring juveniles into the system."

Truancy and dropping out of school are predictors of juvenile delinquency, and those issues hit Native kids hard. The dropout rate of Indian students "is horrendous,"

'It costs money to serve families when they first have contact with the system. It has been said that you can either invest money in the play pen or the state pen.'

OST Council selects Wilson, Montileaux for associate judges

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - The special session of the Oglala Sioux Tribal Council convened on Friday, Oct. 13 with the judiciary committee setting the agenda to select two new associate judges for the OST court. After interviewing nine candidates, Saunie Wilson and Charles Montileaux were selected to four year terms as associate judges for the tribal court.

Candidates included Larry Mamula (had 22 years experience in the law in South Dakota), Marina Fast Horse (just completed a four year term as associate judge in Pine Ridge), Steve Hawk Sr. (worked many years as tribal lawyer, served as judge), Sidney Witt (served as judge, currently working as temporary associate judge), Bill Lone Hill (worked a number of years as tribal prosecutor), John Hussman (many years experience with Public Safety, a great deal of training in the law), Lena Bissonette Hart, Sauni Wilson and Charles Montileaux.

In the first vote, Montileaux with 8, Wilson with 6, Lone Hill 5 and Hussman with 3 moved on to the next round. In the second round of votes, Montileaux and Wilson both received eight votes, Lone Hill and Hussman received six each and in a run-off tribal president John Steele broke a seven all tie for Hussman. In the final vote Montileaux received 10, Wilson nine and Hussman eight with Montileaux and Wilson earning the selections and a four year term.

"After my niece died from a meth drug overdose, I really wanted to try and make a difference in our community," said Saunie Wilson when speaking to the council, "if selected as a judge, I would work to set up a special drug

OST council has full agenda for April meeting

PINE RIDGE - The tribal council has set April 25-27 in Pine Ridge at the Red Cloud building for its regular session required by the constitution.

Agenda items include removing the board of housing, selection of a new executive director, adopting and enacting a children and family code, mandating registration of convicted sex offenders on Pine Ridge Reservation, establishing a Indian Child Welfare Act committee, creating a youth affairs standing committee and limiting the number of gency medical response as an EMT. She said, "There are two EMT's on each 48 hour shift. We also have "no transport" calls where the patient does not need emergency care. Those qualified as advanced life support can do IV's and are under the supervision of Dr. Amos Mackey." She also noted that some patients with private health care insurance or Title IX are transported to the Bennett County Hospital. It depends on the call and the seriousness. She added, "We have had major emergencies handled by a life flight helicopter. We get 2-3 calls per shift and we also get referrals to Pine Ridge and Rapid City Regional."

Oglala Sioux representative, Tom Poor Bear of the Eagle Nest District, former OST councilwoman, Ruth Brown, and other key personnel have apparently taken the lead since 1999 in leveraging enough funding to finally have a ground breaking in the near future. There is no stated timeline for construction of the project; however, the sentiment is that it would be nice to have it completed before the winter snows fly again.

Poor Bear said, "I want to thank the community of Wanblee for making this a reality. We will have an official ground breaking later on and the President of the Oglala Sioux Tribe and others will be there."

Brown said the project began in 1999 when the renovation of the health center begin with Patrick Guerue and Jeremy High Horse seeking funding. Guerue was the health center director and he set aside $100,000 from the medicare and medicard funds from the center. A grant was submitted and approved to the United States Department of Agriculture for $50,000. Several years ago, a $15,000 donation was received from the Shakopee Mdewakanton Sioux Community.

When Francine Red Willow became permanent director of the Wanblee Health Center, she assisted in updating the grant to the Shakopees for a grant of $60,441.

Brown said many community meetings were held the past 10 years to get to the point they are at now.

"James and Eleanor Charging Crow have spent their lifetime dedicated to the ambulance service and also the late Leona Winters and the late Irma Bear Stops-Rooks," said Brown. She said she herself didn't stop from pursuing funding to get the garage and office built.

On April the Eagle Nest District received good news when Shakopee granted the full amount requested of $75,441.00.

On Monday, several people came together to informally mark the occasion of having secured enough financing to get the building off the ground. Ruth Brown, Francine Red Willow, Earlene Rooks, Monica Terkildsen, and Angelita Between Lodges came together and shared a bit of their enthusiasm. The remainder of their enthusiasm will likely be evident once the project is finally completed. Brown said, that the name of this success story should read, "A dream that had to be built."

The new facility is described as a 2,400 square foot building with two bays for ambulance parking, two sleeping quarters, a lounge, bathroom facilities, a commons area and office space. It will be constructed directly north of and adjacent to the Wanblee Health Center.

The site underwent an environment assessment in May of 2005 by Monica Macek of the Martin Field office of the Aberdeen Area Indian Health Service and it was determined that the building project would have no significant adverse effect on the environment. Monica Terkildson said, "Not having to burn diesel will be good for the environment. There will be sleeping quarters, living quarters and a shorter response time."

There also exists a scope of work for whoever is awarded the contract to build the facility and addresses everything from communications, fire alarm system, and electrical systems. A checklist outlines the specific codes that address the foundation, roof systems, doors, cooling and heating system, plumbing and lighting relying on industry standards.

Earlene Rooks spoke of her mother Irma's early work with the tribal health board. She said, "Mom always had a dream that we would not have to travel so far." Leona Bear Stops was cited as another community member who was dedicated to a vision of better health care for Wanblee.

On the way out of town, EMT's Julia Chips and Tanya Dull Knife were stopped at the convenience store for refreshments. Chips has been a full-time basic EMT for the last two and half years. She said, "I like my job. I like helping the people and my family. I took EMT classes in Rapid City for five weeks." She said the worse scenario to encounter as emergency response personnel is when motor vehicle crashes occur. Dull Knife said she remains in the back with the patient as Chips does the driving.

Above: Emmanuel Mission currently leases this garage and the house for use by the Wanblee ambulance service. The buildings were once a gas station and store. The structure is deteriorating and a lack of security has necessitated a need for new facilities. Several members of the Wanblee community came together for a preliminary announcement of funding for the construction of the new Wanblee ambulance facility. A ground breaking ceremony will be announced later and the facility will be constructed north and adjacent to the Wanblee Health Center. court to deal with the large drug use on Pine Ridge."

Wilson was the personnel director at Prairie Wind Casino from 1994-96 and for the last 11 years has served as the executive secretary of the OST Gaming Commission. She has her masters degree in Public Administration and all but the dissertation done for a doctorate.

Charles Montileaux served as associate judge from 1999-2003. Montileaux earned a bachelor of arts degree in sociology and social work from the University of Dubuque and two masters degrees, one in theology and one in religion and divinity.

An attempt to two thirds onto the council agenda an ordinance to remove the board of directors of the Oglala Sioux Lakota Housing failed with a vote of 8-5; the two thirds vote required nine votes to get on the agenda.

The council did vote unanimously 14-0 to approve a contract with Drifting Goose Construction to build a $2.2 million transit building outside of Pine Ridge for the OST Transit program.

Sex offenders regulations

Laddimer Clifford is in charge of this reporting function. He utilizes the tribal criminal code to guide his work. Prior to last year, it was completed in a rather loose fashion; however, he reports that he works cooperatively with the state in order to keep track of sex offenders who may be living and working on the Rosebud reservation and who need to register with his office.

With some 50 sex offenders registered, Clifford says that his office has an agreement in place with the county sheriff's offices of Mellette, Tripp and Todd counties to cooperate in keeping track of the movement of such offenders. At this juncture, the offender list has not been disseminated to the communities; however, it will be up to the RST council as to how that information gets out to the public.

Clifford says that his office maintains a clipboard of offenders and this information is available for inspection or the public may call in and make inquiries relative to the list.

He said that the White Buffalo Calf Woman's Society was very helpful in urging offenders to register with the Rosebud Law Enforcement Services. A sex offender must register every six months and each time they change work place or residence they have three days to register or they may be guilty of a Class B demeanor which provides for a possible $500 fine or six months in jail.

Ragsdale letter furthermore notes that "In case of delegation to a state or states, federal law grants a state or states a corresponding right of access to the tribe's jurisdiction to implement the law."

Enabling a state to enter into a tribe's jurisdiction is an incursion that most tribe's will most likely resist as it sounds rather vague when it allows a state to function in a tribe's jurisdiction. No one really knows what allowing that function to occur on tribal land will have in the future; say a hundred years from now.

A case in point in Rosebud Sioux Tribe vs. Kneip in 1977 when the Supreme Court said that the Acts of 1904, 1907 and 1910 indicated congressional intent to diminish the Rosebud reservation and which essentially opened the way for settlement by settlers; who knew that the acts would come back to haunt the Sicangu oyate and result in the Rosebud reservation being reduced from five counties to one. RST had filed suit contending that the original Rosebud reservation boundary had not changed in spite of the three acts and they lost.

Specifically, the Walsh standards relate to the tracking of offenders once they are released, the sharing of information between jurisdictions where the sex offenders live, work or attend school and notifying the community of their presence.

Prior to the Adam Walsh legislation, there was no provision for sex offenders who were convicted in tribal court or for those who enter tribal jurisdictions after having been convicted in another jurisdiction. According to Ragsdale, this has resulted in inconsistent information to tribal authorities about such offenders who enter their jurisdictions. Also there is inconsistency in tracking offenders and making that information available to communities so that they are aware of their presence and for the protection of their families.

Section 127 of the Adam Walsh act seeks to fill the gap by allowing tribes to participate in the sex offender registration and notification program. The act gives tribes a choice to act as a registration jurisdiction or to delegate that function to the state.

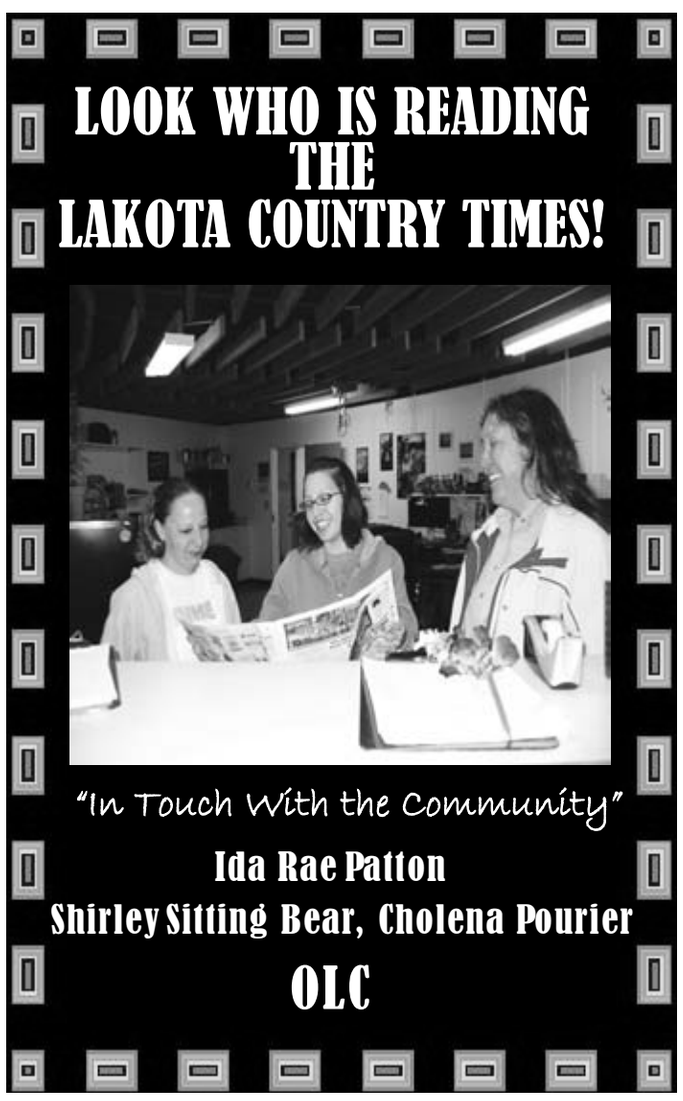
For tribes that already fall under state jurisdiction and which are known as PL 280 states, this function becomes automatic. Ragsdale wrote, "If a tribe elects to function as a registration jurisdiction it will have essentially the same sex offender registration and notification functions and responsibilities as a state, but will be free to make cooperative agreements with a state or states (by mutual agreement) for pooling or sharing of these functions in overlapping responsibility."

Oglala Nation updated ordinance before council

The Oglala Sioux Public Safety has been working since 1972 to keep their sex offender's list updated and in compliance with tribal law. Denise Brings Him Back, administrative assistant at Public Safety, she said there are 52 sex offenders on their list and they work to keep it updated with state law.

She said there is an additional five offenders who are out of compliance. Public safety officers are used to keep track of the offenders and she works with the offenders to comply with tribal law and state law. She said she urges the offenders to stay in compliance with state law as if the don't they can be arrested for non compliance from the state if they are stopped outside reservation boundaries.

An updated ordinance was placed on the agenda for the OST council meetings scheduled this week. The updated ordinance amends ordinance #00-27 and ordinance #05-14 establishing mandatory registration of convicted sex offenders on the Pine Ridge reservation.



The proposed ordinance lists in details what the sex offenders must comply with. The sex offender is required to register within five days of coming into the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation and must register every six months. Public Safety is required to maintain the database and utilize the information for law enforcement purposes.

Brings Him Back said in the past they would read the names over the KILI radio for public awareness.

Last year, state law enacted stronger sex offenders regulations including a website that can be accessed by public to the whereabouts of current sex offenders.

The URL is http://www.sor.sd.gov and doesn't list the entire lists of both Shannon County and Todd County.

paid school board meetings.

The agenda includes a resolution to set the two top priorities for the Indian Reservation Roads projects and certifying the Wounded Knee District election.

The council spent discussed the agenda until 2 p.m. and approved an adjusted agenda by two thirds vote.

The greater part of Wednesday discussion evolved around the construction of Prairie Winds Casino.

A certificate of completion was presented to the council for approval with Peniska Construction. The construction built the casino and the hotel.

The motion was tabled until legal counsel could be present.

Discussion included problems with leakage in the building, warping of the casino floor. The casino was built on loose soil which shifted and caused problems in the walls, causing some leakage.

The casino has been open for business and grand opening dates are scheduled for June for the casino and the opening of the motel.

Finding an experienced hotel managers was another topic discussed on the day's agenda along with the testing of wind energy on the Pine Ridge reservation. Wind testing has been done on Red Shirt table, near Oglala Lakota College's Piya Wiconi and at the Allen Dam.

Thrash said.

Robert Cook, Oglala Lakota and a teacher at Central High School, said he tracked 104 Native students who were freshmen in the 2003-04 school year, and only 11 of them will graduate this year.

According to the South Dakota Department of Education, 13,232 Native students were enrolled in the state's public schools in 2004, making up 10.8 percent of the student population.

But only 66 percent of Native students graduated at the end of the 2004-05 academic year.

"A lot of kids don't buy into the Rapid City school district," said Scott Means, who works with Title VII programs at Central to increase the graduation rate of Native students. "They have other things going on far more important than school, like eating, being safe. They don't see the point in it; they can't see the future very well. They're in survival mode."

If children aren't doing well in school, it could be an indicator that their families are in crisis, according to Seventh Circuit Judge Janine Kern, a member of the DMC subcommittee as well as the Federal Advisory Committee on Juvenile Justice.

Kern said she has seen 13- or 14-year-old children walk out of her courtroom "who have lost hope in their future." Determining why they lose hope requires a complicated answer, Kern said, but some of them are mentally ill, and others suffer from severe poverty, she said.

"It's about getting therapy to those children, getting families to cooperate," she said.

Kern emphasized that she is not just talking about Native juveniles, but any children who are "so disrupted academically, so far off track, they will have a difficult time without intervention and services."

These same problems apply to the youth at reservation schools and the tribal court system.

Sense of belonging

At North Middle School, the hallways have Native American images everywhere: cutouts of Plains Indians, a star quilt, an eagle.

In the Lakolkiciyapi Room at Central High, where a buffalo robe hangs on the wall, Native elders work with students and Robert Cook, incorporates tribal geography and demographics into social studies lessons.

Integrating culture can make Native kids feel more comfortable in school, but a band-aid approach - holding a Native American Day and calling it good - won't suffice, Cook said. "You look at creative ways to integrate culture day to day" to give students a foundation for the future, he said. "You have to let kids know they can wear a shirt and tie from eight to five and go to a sweat after work."

The school district takes steps to ease transitions for students. The Title VII program focuses on grades 5, 8, and 9, the grades at which students move in and out of middle school, Means said.

In a tactic called "cohorting," groups of students going from North Middle School to Central all register for the same classes at the new school, Knickrehm said.

The same partnering occurs in the Lakolkiciyapi Room, which is a resource only for freshmen; instructors try to get groups of them into the same sophomore classes so they'll see familiar faces as they continue through school.

Native students who stay in school receive an eagle feather to wear to the graduation ceremony, according to David Weeks, another instructor in the Lakolkiciyapi Room.

Receiving an eagle feather is a high honor, a mark of great achievement, Means said.

Involving the family

Parents of Indian students have opportunities to participate in their children's education, Weeks said. There are quarterly Native American parents' meetings and monthly Title VII Parents Advisory Committee meetings. On May 10, Central is having a Native American parents' night, he said.

Schools hold several powwows: a back-to-school powwow in October; Knollwood School Powwow on May 18 from 4:30 to 7:30 p.m.; and North Middle School Powwow on May 29 at noon, outdoors if the weather permits, Weeks said.

Parents may get involved in less positive ways, through truancy court, juvenile diversion, or circuit court, if a student is habitually truant.

Dexter Whitman, director of the Pennington County Juvenile Diversion Program, said his program is so busy, "We don't have time to come up for air." The diversion program does what its name suggests: it diverts juveniles away from court and into programs that will address the issues leading them into trouble.

Chief among those troubles is truancy, and "we've had to get creative about how to handle it," Whitman said.

One creative solution is truancy court, managed through the diversion program by Pratt Anspach and held in the schoolhouse rather than the courthouse, at Central and at General Beadle Elementary.

Now in its second year, truancy court covers the entire Rapid City School District, as well as Douglas and Hill City. Anspach's current caseload is 143 students; she works with them and their families to find community programs, transportation, counseling, or academic mentoring.

Anspach said she likes to involve families and get their agreement on a course of action. "That way, they feel invested in the program," she said.

Anspach visits students at school or calls them at home to tell them they've done well or to find out if they need assistance or school supplies. "They're just tickled with that contact," she said.

Has Anspach seen positive changes? "Oh, absolutely," she said. Students' attitudes toward school and family improve, they make a greater effort, and learn that their situation is not hopeless.

At truancy court at General Beadle, 22 out of 27 parents showed up, Anspach said.

"Obviously, a lot of parents and students don't want to be sent to court," she said.

Work not done

The school district's efforts are commendable, but the services are not comprehensive enough to reach all at-risk students. The Lakolkiciyapi Room has only so many desks; a Friday afternoon inipi (sweat) will accommodate only 15 boys, even though many more would like to go, and there is no inipi for girls, Means said.

Although funding exists for two prevention facilitators, only Knickrehm's position is filled. The other position, which Means vacated to move to Title VII, is a temporary position that doesn't include benefits such as health insurance. North's principal, Jeanne Burckhard, said DOC has okayed filling the position with a sub.

Cook pointed out that having American Indian teachers in the classroom presents a successful role model to Indian students, but the number of Native teachers in the state is far too low considering the high Native student population.

There are 9,000 public school teachers in South Dakota, but only 114 of them are Native; of those, 68 work in Todd and Shannon counties, leaving only 46 elsewhere, Cook said.

Part of the problem is low teacher salaries, Cook said. Tribal colleges offer elementary teaching degrees, but to teach secondary school, Native college students have to attend a state school. And Native students who go to state universities choose areas of study that will provide a better income, he said.

Reallocation of resources

Kern said South Dakota has the third highest rate of incarcerated juveniles per capita in the nation, and the yearly DOC budget for juvenile offenders is more than $30 million to serve approximately 900 children.

"I mention this not to criticize the Department … but to make a point. We need to shift our focus to prevention, and as a community we need to focus our efforts on meeting the needs of children and families in crisis," Kern said.

"It costs money to serve families when they first have contact with the system," Kern said. "It has been said that you can either invest money in the playpen or the state pen."

Words from the 'trenches'

Not enough sleep can make you fat

Connie Smith-Blanco

The other day I was telling Amanda about something I'd learned on a recent television program, well actually, I heard it on more than one program, so that should mean it's true, right? Anyway, she liked the subject matter as much as I did and she said I should share it in a column sometime. Hello sometime!

The subject of both television shows was my favorite subject of "sleep" and my un-favorite subject, "weight-gain." I flipped a coin and decided I would watch and I'm glad I did. It helped explain one of the smaller mysteries in my life.

Several doctors shared their theories, findings and research on the subject of sleep deprivation. Most of what they shared concerned us women and our battle with the bulge. It appears that because our bodies are so driven by hormones we are subject to a new and ugly hormone. This hormone is made in our brain when we find ourselves going 90 mph in a 5 mph speed zone.

The 90 mph zone is our everyday life, working, not working, raising kids, raising someone else's kids, raising the kid inside ourselves or our husband or companion and running a household of one to twenty-one. Let's face it. It isn't easy to squeeze all of those duties and obligations into a day and have room left over for eight hours of sleep. Something has to give and as much as I love to get my full eight hours (which most doctors recommend strongly) it doesn't always happen.

There are only 24 hours in one day and my limited math skills have shown me time after time that if I use more than sixteen hours doing "awake" things I have less hours to do "sleep" things. Anyway, I know I'm not the only woman rowing in that boat.

So what does sleep deprivation have to do with weight gain? Apparently when we shortchange ourselves in the sleep area, our brain goes to work making this ugly hormone. And after getting less than eight hours of sleep in a night, this ugly hormone shows it's ugly head every minute of every day until we make up for those lost hours of sleep.

What is this ugly hormone, or should I call it the fat hormone? This hormone creates an unnatural hunger in our bodies. It's sole purpose is to make us think we are hungry and makes us want to eat until we fill that empty pit. Problem is, it's a bottomless pit. Nothing satisfies this hunger. I know I've felt that way lots of times but never equated it to the sleep loss of the night before.

I don't know about you, but I was relieved that these unexplained "hunger attacks" were finally explained! Amanda and I have had discussions about our inability to stop "snacking" even when we clearly know we should not be hungry. We always wrote it off to the stress of a deadline or the stress of "something".

So now we know, if we don't get enough sleep, our bodies will be fooled into thinking they're hungry and must be filled with food, food and more food. Which brings me back to my un-favorite subject, weight-gain, which is inevitable if my stomach is a bottomless pit. The answer? Try not to be sleep deprived. Try not to let this ugly hormone run my life, and most of all, get more sleep, here in the trenches.

Not enough emphasize on the sacred Lakota language

Dear Editor:

At this point in time, our youth need to learn our ancient Lakota jargon. The new agers, who are sending in articles to the Lakota oriented newspapers are doing a great job of explaining Lakota thought and philosophy but there is never enough emphasize on our sacred wakan language. This is sad but it's true.

I would say any race of people, especially those from overseas can learn quite a bit about our Lakota culture from books written by our non Lakota speaking authors.

If nothing is done about relearning our Lakota jargon, we could end up with wasicu speaking medicine men conducting our sacred ceremonies.

I'm not saying Tunkshila doesn't understand the whiteman's ska wicasas language.

All I am saying is, there was a straight talk language that goes with the cannupa.

I heard some Jewish people saying their evening prayers on an airplane. I listened real close, they were praying in their native tongue.

Book I and Book II is just not doing anything spiritual for our youth. Whenever we go into our sweat lodge or yuwipi ceremonies, the language that Tunkshila handed down to us from generation to generation should be the spoken language.

I quote tahansi, the late John Around Him, who used to say, "Hoksipila wakinya oyate hena wasicu iyapi sni yelo."

The white man's language is based on a prophet (wosakopi). The Lakota language is based on our sharing wakic'icupi.

Materially, we're poor, but spiritually we're rich, we're pretty much dysfunctional now, but those who are relearning our Lakota life ways share a heartfelt handshake when they see each other.

It's usually a new age handshake, but at least, it's an acknowledgement. Hoka hey.

Thoughts that come from the heart

What's in it for you!

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett

EDITOR AND PUBLISHER
LAKOTA COUNTRY TIMES

Today I woke up and man I felt good. I feel happy. It's wonderful to feel happy, especially if this emotional euphoria can last all day and then into the next day and then the next day. I am not sure how long it will last but I know this, it feels good and I am going to hang onto it as long as I can and find ways to keep it going as long as I can.

It shows too, I know because I keep smiling and I can't help but laugh and I can't help but make jokes. I want to share my joy. I think people think I am drunk or high, because I got some weird looks. Well, I am not drunk nor am I sneaking a drink around the corner. I don't drink. I just feel good in a natural happy way.

I tell you what I did, I did something for myself… for once. I went to a personal healing retreat out in the Black Hills, out away from everything, including my cell phone. I did some work on myself.

A good analogy of explaining it, is almost like I put on a pair of airtight face goggles on my eyes and took a trip into my body and my mind.

It was cool, I took to the stage and traveled around my heart and upon examination, I discovered why that wasn't working right.

Not only was there fat cells beginning to grow in places from my overeating but there was a strange dark substance like black smoke that seemed to float around my heart, in the crevices and out around to the other parts of my body.

I can see that substance was holding down my energy level. It prevented me from cracking that big smile and fueling that sense of humor which in turn makes my heart dance.

Why wasn't my heart dancing? Why was this black stuff stagnating my body parts and my spirit? It was amazing to be able to see what was going on in there and there was no way I could just journey out of there and leave it like that. I knew if I did, somehow, somewhere down my life's calendar, it would eventually knock out my body parts and one by one they would come to a complete stop.

I also knew if I kept it up, I could either die from some sort of disease, maybe like diabetes, maybe a heart disease or it would get so weak in there, some gene from my family's genetic disorders would attack. I was just tired. I realized I needed to cleanse myself.

Almost like when you just know that your car is going to give out. You can tell by the way it was been running. You hear the knocks or you just sense your car is going.

And you wonder how much longer you can make that car work until it gives out. You get a fear because you know that you need your car, so you hustle to get it fixed or develop a plan how to get a different one.

I knew then and there, that I needed to fix what was making those parts give out and most of all, I needed to get all that black, heavy smoke out of there. That black stuff was the main culprit.

So I did, I got up there on that stage called and played out the scene of 'Repair Amanda Rose.'

It was cool, it played out well, I had help. They were cool and understanding stage people and they helped me clear out the negative energy and helped me to see why I couldn't feel the joy like I used to. That big ugly dark form is gone now and it feels so darn good to see through good clean air again.

That black stuff was a feeling of being 'depressed.'

We all get it, young and old, lean or fat. Unless we learn how to deal it with, the black cloud can get quite heavy until it hurts us. It stagnates us.

The important ending of this scenario is that there is nothing wrong with admitting you need help, no matter what gets to you, there is always help out there.

Rather you are depressed, addicted or a user, an overeater, a worry wart, have anger problems or can't leave those cigarettes alone or just being in a whole lot of hurt because of loss or grief.

There is always an answer, there is always resources and there is always some support somewhere. Find it. I did.

Make sure you get the oil change you paid for

Dear Editor:

Unfortunately many men and women have been victimized by these oil changing places which have not changed the oil in the car which they are supposed to.

Many men and women are victimized by these oil changing places by not doing the job of changing the oil in their customer's cars. These businesses very easily victimize women especially native women, simply because the native women do not know.

I too was victimized three times, I usually change my own oil but I was to go on a trip and in a hurry so I took my car to this well known place. When they called and said my car was ready I went and paid for the oil change and took my car home. The next morning before I left on my trip I just thought I would check the oil. I pulled out the dip stick and I saw that the oil was not changed. It was as black as it was before I took it there for the oil change. I then checked and the filter was not changed either.

I took the car back and told them the oil was not changed but they insisted that they changed the oil. They even used some swear words but I was not going to leave without an oil change. I finally called the manager and he came down, took a look and said change the oil. The following two times I never took the car home, but I checked it right there and it was not changed and so the fight was on again and eventually it got changed.

I have asked many men and women as to what brand of oil or what weight oil they use in their cards. They have no idea but usually people take their cars to an oil changing place and want an oil change and never asking for a brand or what weight oil they need for their cars. Usually, for a new car a 5-20 weight is recommended but after the car has traveled 75,000 miles the next best weight is 10W40 and this weight will give many more miles.

When you take your car in for an oil change and do not have specifics in brand or weight, they put bulk oil in your car. Now this bulk oil is in a big tank or drum and this oil usually sits while and begins to settle and separates therefore it is not a uniform weight oil and it can cause problems.

The oil in a car must be changed every 3-5 thousand miles. By doing this the car will travel many more miles. To save money and the car, people should

Notes From Indian Country

Honoring those who died at Washita

By Tim Giago
(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

It was a little early in the year for the corn to be "as high as an elephant's eye" in Oklahoma this past Friday, but the blue skies and the low flying clouds made this spring day a day to remember.

I was invited to attend the ribbon cutting ceremony to celebrate the opening of the Washita Battlefield National Historic Site and the still incomplete Cultural Heritage Center in Cheyenne, Oklahoma on April 20.

History buffs will recall that on the early morning of November 27, 1868, Lt. Colonel George A. Custer, with a detachment of the 7th Cavalry, attacked the sleeping camp of Chief Black Kettle and slaughtered nearly 100 men, women and children. Black Kettle, a man who had survived the Massacre at Sand Creek in Colorado in 1864 while flying an American flag and a white flag of peace, was killed at Washita.

The Heritage Center is a magnificent piece of architecture located in the rolling hills of Oklahoma north of the community of Cheyenne. For the Peace Chief of the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes of Oklahoma, Chief Lawrence Hart, it was a struggle of many years to reach this goal.

Chief Hart told about his trips to Washington, D. C. in an effort to raise money for the site, but noted that his early efforts had been rebuffed because some in the United States Senate did not consider the sight of a massacre to be of historic significance. It was only after the people of Oklahoma City sought funds to build a monument to commemorate the bombing of the federal building there that the some senators saw the connection and voted to fund the Cultural Heritage Center at the Washita Battlefield National Historic site.

Governor Darrell Flyingman of the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes of Oklahoma put things in realistic perspective when he arose to speak. He talked about the thousands of acres of land either ceded or stolen by hook and crook from the people of his nation over the years. He said, "I consider this to be a site of a massacre and not a battlefield as it is named and I will do everything within my power to see that the site is renamed as the Washita Massacre rather than Battlefield. Gov. Flyingman said that he felt great sorrow for the friends and family members of the massacre at Virginia Tech, but he was sad the television reporters kept referring to this tragedy as the worst massacre in American history. "The massacre of American Indians at Washita, Sand Creek and Wounded Knee were just as horrible and many more died at each massacre site as what happened at Virginia Tech, but I suppose the fact that it was 'just Indians' being slaughtered meant that it was not a part of American history," he said.

There is a long history of kinship between the Cheyenne, Arapaho and the people of the Great Sioux Nation. These three tribes were allies at the Battle of the Little Big Horn and one of the ironies of that battle was that warriors of the very tribes he attacked at Washita punished Custer, the perpetrator of the Washita Massacre.

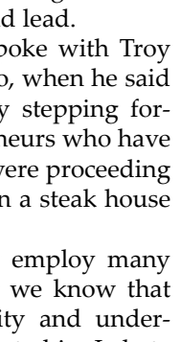
For their victory at the Little Big Horn, the Cheyenne, Arapaho and the Sioux paid a heavy price. Many more Cheyenne and Arapaho were removed from their tribal lands in Montana and Colorado and moved to Western Oklahoma. The 7.5 million acres that make up the Black Hills of South Dakota were confiscated from the Sioux by the United States government. Ironically, just two years before Custer was killed at the Little Big Horn, he led an expedition into the Black Hills and discovered gold there.

The Sioux went to court in 1921 to seek the return of all or portions of the Black Hills and 60 years later, in 1981; the U. S. Supreme Court awarded the tribes $105 million for the theft of the Hills. Never mind that in the interim more than $1 billion dollars in gold, timber and other natural resources were extracted from the Black Hills without a single dime going to the owners of the land, the Indian tribes of the Sioux Nation. It is now 2007 and 26 years have passed since the monetary award and the tribes of the Great Sioux Nation, the poorest of tribes in America, have refused to accept a single penny of the award. Writing on the Black Hills Settlement Case and of the illegal taking of the Black Hills, Supreme Court Justice Harry Blackmun said, "A more ripe and rank case of dishonest dealings may never be found in our history."

Peace Chief Lawrence Hart told me this story. He said that Custer returned to visit the people of the Cheyenne and Arapaho Tribes a few years after the Washita Massacre. After he smoked the pipe of peace with them he was asked to make a promise to them that he would never ever make war against the Cheyenne and Arapaho again. Custer made that promise. He was then told that if he ever broke that promise he would die on that day.

Forgetting his promise, Custer attacked the encampment of Cheyenne, Arapaho and Sioux at the Little Big Horn on June 25, 1876 and he died on that day.

The Cheyenne and Arapaho are working to build a memorial cultural site at Sand Creek in Colorado. And with this column I am requesting the Congressional delegation from South Dakota to introduce a bill that would help raise the funds to build a Cultural Heritage Center at the Massacre Site of Wounded Knee.



The Heritage Center at Washita could not have been constructed without the full support of the Oklahoma Congressional representatives.

Are you listening Representative Stephanie Herseth Sandlin, Senator John Thune, and Senator Tim Johnson? What a tribute and a blessing this would be to the Lakota people of your state.

We need to wake up and get on the gravy train

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

"News by and for Lakota people" is my latest motto as I work quietly to track down the latest in news which is effecting Rosebud reservation residents.

In the hunt for news in an already crowded field, I realized that the journalism field is an area which needs to attract more young Sicangu Lakota oyate so that they can report it through their eyes. Our friend Senator Tom Daschle made that point last year when we attended a fundraising event at the Prairie Edge.

It is an unsettling thing to know that even the media which reports on and serves Lakota people is controlled by people who have primarily an economic interest in delivering a product to Lakota people.

Our schools, businesses, and media outlets are literally crying out for own young people to serve our own people.

When we rely on outside agencies, influence or people who come to take our jobs away it is only one indication that we cannot carry out those basic functions.

There is something wrong when you have 200 teachers who commute to Rosebud each day when we should be preparing our own Lakota students to step up and lead.

I was impressed when I spoke with Troy Heinert a couple of weeks ago, when he said he and his wife were simply stepping forward as local young entrepreneurs who have a stake in our economy and were proceeding along with their plans to open a steak house at the former golf course.

Now, whether or not they employ many Lakota people there, at least we know that they are from the community and understand that it make good sense to hire Lakota people.

Many people love it when they go into a business and are waited upon by people who understand their needs and style of interaction, instead of wanting to simply take their money and run all the way to the bank.

It takes a bit of awareness and observation to see those outside influences here on the Rosebud and it is probably true elsewhere. There are grocery stores, gas stations, news media, and "guest workers" who are literally mining millions of dollars from Lakota people and we need to wake up and get in on the gravy train.

I hope that our college business classes are able to assess exactly what is being harvested from our local economy. It will take a bit of sophisticated analysis, but we need to get a handle on what exactly the outflow of cash is from the Rosebud and make an attempt to redirect that.

Yes, we know that many of those who are benefiting from our critical mass are friends and acquaintances and there is always room for that.

I have some very dear white friends who Ned Metcalf calls "ha ska" but they know all too well that there is a need for everyone to work themselves out of a job and teach young Lakota people to filter into those jobs ultimately.

I never hear any strategies that seek to do that and it may be time to do that.

"News by and for Lakota people" is an attitude that needs to be subsumed into every enterprise that affects Lakota in the near and distant future as our survival depends on it. The government is dying to get out of the "Indian business" and it is time for us to cling that all important "sovereign status" and work very hard to understand how to become economically self-sufficient by running our own affairs public, private and tribal.

The federal government tends to think in terms of national pride and we need to do it likewise.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) resides on the Rosebud with his son, Beaux. He earned a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) from Harvard University. The transmission fluid needs changing too. It is recommended to be changed every 15,000 miles and by doing these things our yards may not be full of worn out cars. I recommend and use Pennzoil for many years and many more miles.

Little Wound needs OT to repeat as All West champs

Hornbeck earns MVP, McCauley selected as all star

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

For the second year in a row, the Oglala Lakota Regulators (Little Wound) won the All West tourney in Denver, this year's champs include: Back row: Billi Hornbeck, team manager, Vern Marshall, TJ McCauley, Dustin Shangreaux, Rich Big Boy, Michael Apple, Darelyn Runnels (assistant manager). Front row: Brice Hornbeck, Brennan Montgomery, Casey Montileaux, Orin Three Stars and Brett Thunder Hawk. Photo courtesy of Billi Hornbeck.

DENVER - Playing under the name, Oglala Lakota Regulators, Little Wound returned to the 2007 Amerin All West Native American Basketball Classic this past weekend and wrapped up their second straight championship with a 69-61 overtime win over 4 the Love of the Game out of Oklahoma.

A total of 25 boy's teams and 19 girl's teams participated in the three day event including five girl's teams and five boy's teams from South Dakota.

Down by eight points late in regulation, Little Wound battled back to tie up the championship game and take it into overtime and get the win. Brice Hornbeck led the way with 31 points, TJ McCauley helped with 14 and Rich Big Boy who reinjured his knee and hadn't played any of the tournament games played the fourth quarter and the overtime period and chipped in 12 points.

Little Wound opened pool play with a 72-65 win over Belknap Boyz, followed it up with a loss to Northern Cheyenne I 61-58 and finished off pool play with an 81-57 win over Young Mesquaki an a 78-45 win over the Wambdi. Little Wound played Belknap again in the opening game of the tournament and beat them 59-49 as Hornbeck hit for 26 points. Little Wound earned revenge over Northern Cheyenne in the quarterfinals beating them 66-54 as Brice hit for 23, TJ added 19 and Michael Apple helped with 15. In the semis, Little Wound downed Sicangu Akicita (Todd County/St. Francis) 65-38 as Hornbeck hit for 25 and McCauley added 22.

Hornbeck was named MVP of the tournament, McCauley was named to the first team all stars and Rich Big Boy was named most inspirational.

Kul Wicasa (Lower Brule) won the silver bracket beating Wind River while Kyal Middletent earned first team all star honors and Will Edwards and RJ Estes were named to the second all star team.

Pine Ridge South Dakota B-Ball Divas lost to 4 Love of the Game in the championship game. Red cloud took second in the silver bracket losing by one point to the Lady Chiefs of Wind River. Lacey Weston of the Divas and Marque Lunderman of Red Cloud earned first team all star nods while Christian Janis of the Divas and Ida Clarke of Red Cloud earned second team honors. Janis was also named most inspirational.

Cheyenne Eagle Butte girls and boys participated along with Red Cloud and Pine Ridge boys and Lower Brule girls. Both Red Cloud and Pine Ridge went undefeated in pool play but lost in the tournament.

Mustangs receive second place State A trophy

KYLE - After a meeting betrween the South Dakota High school Activities association and representatives of Little Wound School, Little Wound held an all school assembley to present the team the second place trophy from the State A tourney in Rapid City and individual medals to the players on Wednesday, April 25 during an assembly. The team included coaches Jamie Feather Earring and Travis Brave bird in the back row, and the team including Michael Apple, Brice Hornbeck, Ty Lunderman, Devon LeBeau, Rich Big Boy, TJ McCauley and Vern Marshall in the middle row with Casey Montileaux and Naploean Lays Bad in the front with team managers. Iyotte resigns from KINI 96.1 radio

ST. FRANCIS - Richard Iyotte, station manager at KINI FM radio resigned recently and leaves behind a staff that will now work to create programming that is reflective of their creative talents.

Mary Lee Fast Horse will now serve as acting station manager and as the morning deejay on KINI, she appears to have a good sense of what the community wishes to promote in terms of Lakota culture, language, country and western music, Native American music, and a format that targets a younger audience. The Sicangu tribal membership is estimated to consist of a large portion of young people in their teens and 20s and their listening priorities will most likely be considered.

Perry DeCory, has that great almost stereotypical "deejay" voice and is able to relate well to the younger set and will continue to take the lead in providing the latest contemporary sounds. DeCory also has an interest in introducing the listening audience to some exceptional "jazz" music.

Iyotte is a professional musician who led the group Arrowspace with several albums during the 1990's and early 2000.

Former deejay, Contessa Big Crow-Jenkins, discovered the song and proceeded to play the song and it soon caught on.

Iyottte was quite experienced at networking with musicians and the media and appeared at ease in integrating the newest of technology into programming at the station. He also well versed in integrating programming that was cognizant of the Lakota culture and language, while integrating other formats which are standard at the station, including a Catholic oriented format.

Alice Starboy serves as the receptionist at KINI, while the other deejays include Cynthia Crow Eagle on Sundays and Karen and Laura Moore during Wednesdays after school.

  Ditch Clean Up
  Junction 18 to Sharp's

Thank you to all individuals for your support in our Month of the Child Clean-up efforts on Friday, April 20th 2007. Your efforts and the efforts of all program staff have helped to produce a successful clean up. The Oglala Sioux Tribe had 54 participants and accomplished approximately 3 miles of roadway clean up. Our efforts used approximately 384 bags of refuse and between 10 and 14 bags of recyclable aluminum cans, so for every mile of roadway we cleaned 128 bags of garbage, and 4 bags of recyclable cans. If we had more volunteers we could do far more and help establish a cleaner reservation environment.The community response has been all positive and we expect the next 3 Fridays to go further and have more participants.
There are serious shortages of equipment including bags and gloves. This road way clean up will also be followed up by a community cleanup effort in each district next month. We are estimating the financial need to be large. If this need is supported by as many entities as possible, the success of the clean up efforts will help drive financial support for the cause.

Phelps and Mousseaux excel in science

KYLE - Todd Phelps and Josh Mousseaux, two Little Wound High School students, have shown achievement in the science field. Both were recently honored for excelling in competition.

Phelps placed first in the National American Indian Science and Engineering Fair, which offers great opportunity for 5th-12th grade students with cash prizes and scholarships. In addition, the exposure and experience students gain stays with them as they progress through their college and professional careers.

NAISEF is a very special Annual Science Fair venue developed by AISES for American Indian students. The fair is an important component of the AISES effort to support Indian education. It is a critical early step towards success for the students who participate.

It was held in March at Albuquerque, N.M., where several area high school students took part in the NAISEF event. This year the organization was pleased to have one of the only K-12 Affiliate School of AISES, with is Little Wound School take part in the science fair.

The annual event is an opportunity for students to actively participate in a science-based learning environment and create science projects that can be shared with peers, teachers, and educators.

The fair provides a forum for students to have their research recognized and critiqued in the disciplines of science, mathematics, engineering, technology and cultural preservation.

SFIS graduates 77 DARE students

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ST. FRANCIS - The middle school staff at St. Francis Indian School headed by principal, Dina Begay, were busy putting the finishing touches on a very ornate setting for the 2007 D. A. R. E. graduation for the fifth and sixth grade classes. Four large sheet cakes, red, white and blue balloons adorned the gymnasium as two large banners with white lettering and a black background that read "Nagik Sapa" in Lakota were strategically hung on the stage area.

Nagik Sapa translates to 'wise spirit' and in the Lakota scheme of emotional and physical maturation it often is used to describe those who have attained a certain maturity in refining their intellectual development.

D.A.R.E Officer, Delta Anderson, of the Rosebud Law Enforcement Services initiated the event by calling upon Homer White Lance of SFIS who gave a very rousing prayer in Lakota. The intent and volume of White Lance's prayer was a great reminder that the Lakota language is very much in use these days on the Rosebud.

The gymnasium was about three quarters full as SFIS superintendent, Larry Parker, could be heard thanking the parents for their presence today as a show of support for their graduates. He echoed the sentiments of Rosebud tribal police chief, Charles Red advance to compete at the 58th Intel International Science and Engineering Fair in Albuquerque, N.M. on May 13.

Phelps, 17, a junior, participated this year with his research and project entered into the category of Environmental Science of "Does the paint in your home give off more that just color?" Various teachers and advisors aided this project. Phelps did an outstanding job at National Science Fair and placed first in the event as well as received a certificate for recognition of an outstanding project for continuing efforts to aide tribal members in research on effects affecting the nations Indian reservations. Phelps received high scores from four judges, one even saying he was proud to see the efforts of a young man and hoped it helped influence others to do the say in their own communities. The award was a special award given by the National EPA council. Phelps was asked to continue his reseal and invited back for next year's competition.

"It was an honor to work and travel with Todd; he is a very smart young man and has the ability to succeed in whatever he ventures for. I personally am looking forward to the continued efforts of this student and will be curious to see where his ambitions and brains take him a special thanks goes out to Jennifer Miksanik, Todd's microbiology and Physics instructor at LWHS whom worked with Todd, as well as Tatewin Means from Oglala Lakota College," said Misty Rose Mousseaux, who is student teaching at the high school in math and science. "Sincere congratulations and great recognition should be given to this young man, hopefully others will take an in-depth look at the areas of math and science and view all aspects of where their futures can take them with research," she added

Josh Mousseaux, 17 and a junior at LWHS, was recently selected as one of two Native American students nationwide to participate in International Space School summer program for several weeks. Mousseaux will travel to Houston, Texas to the Johnson Space Center to create a mission to Mars. Each year, 30 to 40 students are selected worldwide from 20 countries to participate in the program. This is the first year, two Native American students were selected. The other student is from Shonto Prep School in the Arizona. All students are high school juniors.

The students were selected on their math and science skills. They will create their simulated trip to Mars, live on Mars and return home. Last week, Lynn Gibson, an International Space School Foundation board member, traveled to Little Wound High School to met Mousseaux, award his scholarship and tour the school.

The summer academic program emphasizes solving technical problems allied with practical application of solutions as member of a team. Lecturers include astronauts, medical researchers, engineers, managers and technicians from Johnson Space Center and companies associated with the space program.

Crow, who earlier said that all the D.A.R.E. graduates were "winners."

Red Crow said, "Each of you is a winner. D.A.R.E has high standards that you have met. You have family with high expectations. Winners expect nothing but the best for themselves and you are all winners."

Byron Wright of the SFIS school board said, "When I see kids in D.A.R.E they are going to be our future leaders…There may be some real serious problems in the future, like technology or social issues and maybe one of you will come up with a solution for teen suicide or global warming."

SFIS middle school principal, Dina Begay, was also very encouraging to the students when she said, "Someday, you too need to be drug free for your children."

All 77 D.A.R.E. graduate who had undergone ten weeks of training walked across the stage to receive a briefcase and a certificate and were congratulated by the group of speakers.

Afterward, a luncheon was served to all visitors in attendance which included soup, wojapi, coffee and a share of those beautiful cakes which had been ordered for the special occasion.

ASK ANNA

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I just ran onto your column and so I thought I would write.

My mom was adopted out in the 1930s, before she died I got in contact again with some people, and have stayed in contact with people up there ever since 1995.

The photos are of Dorothy Green as a baby and as an adult.

Will I ever be able to find out who her birth parents were?

I don't even know what her birth name was, she was given such limited information.

She was told she born in South Dakota, seven miles across the South Dakota line from Chadron, Neb., making it in the Slim Buttes area of Pine Ridge. She was born at her grandmother's house, and that she was Sioux, that's it.

Do you see any other information that could help me? Can you see who any of my family was? It makes it so hard on all of us, since we never got the chance to meet our relatives, never got the opportunity of seeing our grandparents, not even knowing who you come from, it's awful.

My Moms name was :

Dorothy Ann Green

She was born March 12, 1934.

She was raised by Dewey and Florence Green and it was Florence who told my mom that she was adopted. My mom had no reason to lie about it, she never asked anyone for anything. She was raised when it was bad to be Native, she did NOT raise me and my sisters this way.

So I am asking for help in finding my mom's birth family. How these people got my mom, I don't have any idea. I don't even know what her birth name was..

It's a horrible feeling when you don't even know where you came from, it makes you feel lost, and all alone. No grandparents, no family. Hopefully someone will be able to look at the pic of her when she was a baby and recognise her.

Looking for Roots

Dear Looking:

I do see a Crow name. Start there. Check birth records in Gordon, Neb., as well as Indian Health Service.

Good Luck.

Dear Anna,

I read you column every week. I'm almost 15 weeks pregnant do you see me with a boy or girl? Is my relationship going to last?

Curious

Dear Curious:

Congratulations! I see a boy. Relationships don't automatically "last." They take a concentrated effort and a decision to work together to make it work. The key ingredient besides the decision is a cooperative effort based on health. I am speaking chiefly of mental, emotional and spiritual health.

Jealous immature controlling attitudes, especially combined with substance abuse issues will certainly doom any relationship. You do the diagnosis. What do you see? I know that will give you your answer. If you want it to work, the both of you need to make some pretty solid decisions to change the way you deal with life and with each other. Good Luck and God Bless.

Dear Anna,

I heard from a friend that you were a really good person, and you've made her feel better, after she contacted you. I live in Pine Ridge. I am currently married for four years now. Ann, my heart is broken for the mere fact that I just found out my husband has been lying to me. When I was pregnant with my last child, I used to suspect that my husband was cheating on me with his first wife.

He would be gone for a few days at a time, then come home and act like nothing was wrong. A niece of his confirmed my suspicions, and told me they meaning my husband and his ex wife were partying at my niece's house all night at one time.

All that time he would tell me no. I knew in my stomach something just was not right. Before I met my husband I was in a relationship where my man was always running around on me so I was a pro when it came to noticing a liar.

Anna, I don't know what to do anymore. I want to quit but we have two kids together. I'm tired of sacrificing my happiness so that others around me can be happy. My husband accuses me of stuff I don't even do and that really makes me sick to my stomach. I was always taught that when a man is accusing you he is the one who has something to hide.

When his kids come over, they act like my house don't mean anything to them, they are lazy, don't help my daughter clean, they don't even shower everyday. It makes me mad that his ex wife feels she is entitled to send the kids over at her convenience. My husband can't stand up to his ex wives, not once has he ever told them no. It's to a point where I hate him and his ex wives and his kids. I don't know what to do any more will my life get better or do I have to let it all end and start taking care of myself and my children?

Will it work?

Dear Will it work:

Everyone that reads this letter will know immediately, even if they are not psychic that your marriage is over. The final two lines of the letter tell it all: "I hate him" combined with the fear of having to take care of yourself say volumes. Yes, dear, you do have to take care of yourself and your children. You are an adult

- p - e - r - i - o - d.

You are not being a good parent by torturing your children with you and your husband's bad relationship and the examples you are giving to them of adult behavior. As a matter of fact, you are guilty of emotionally crippling them by exposure to substance abuse, anger including throwing things, yelling or moping silence.

That is enough of a lecture from me. Here is what you can do: You can end the relationship, heal yourself of emotional battering, and learn that you are a creator. You create the daily life you live through the choices that you make. You chose your husband knowing who and what he is and was. You determine how you react. You, you, you. You set the tone for emotional balance in your home.

You can go to school. You can get help through programs and social services. You can make a new life. You can develop a relationship with the Creator that gives you enough faith to be okay. You can give your children a good life in a good way.

Get a backbone honey. Quit complaining. Leave him. He will be mandated to pay support. Prepare yourself to make an income. Be brave. Everyone will work together to help you when you begin to help yourself. Get your children and yourself into counseling. Take charge of the life that God gave you. Honor yourself by treating yourself well.

I don't think your life is hopeless and I don't think you are a bad person. I think you are stuck and blinded by chaos and you have decided that you are helpless.

I am not giving you sympathy because that will enable you to remain a victim of your own frozen state.

Sympathy is not helpful. I know my words sound brutal, but I also know that perhaps if you get mad enough you will take charge of your life. I know that is preferable to staying in a hopeless terrible situation.

Being constantly unhappy and hopeless is a slow, emotional death and creates a totally dysfunctional life - and creates dysfunctional hopeless children. You are powerful in your own life. Get up and get going.

Dear Anna,

First of all I would like to wish a good day. My sister spoke very highly of you, and I thought that maybe you could be of some help with what I need to do. I am going through a very tough time right now and I really don't have anyone to help me.

My major problem is finances. I have two graduates, and I barely make enough money to pay bills, some I can't pay.

I pray all the time for help with my needs, but nothing helps. I have a large family to take care of, children and grand children that I love. And I am proud of the two that are going to graduate next month. Hopefully I can get what they need for graduation.

About a couple months ago, a person in my family found an ancient artifact, sticking out of the ground, near my home. I have been keeping this object close to me for some time. I don't know why this object came into my home, or the value of this.

What do you see for my future? What can I do to help myself, I feel like my health is worsening, is it stress? And what about the artifact, what needs to be done with it?

Proud Mother

Dear Proud Mother:

The artifact, so to speak, has come home to somebody that will care for it. I know that it is a temptation to sell it and solve your financial worries - but I see that you won't do that.

There will be a time in the future when it can be placed in the care of the tribe, to teach the youth to honor and respect their past. I would suggest contacting Oglala Lakota College - or one of the other stable reservation colleges when you feel the time is right. I feel there is sacred blood involved with this artifact.

I know how you struggle. I want for it to go away for you. I want you to be okay financially. There will come a time, in about three years, when you feel more financial success and you retire that type of stress.

In the mean time, I do see you selling some articles that you make. I also see less stress financially as one of your children reaches, very soon, a good economic solution to his problems. Don't worry so much about "what you give" to your children and grandchildren. The most precious thing you can give is your time. That is what memories are created from.

Your health related struggles are based on stress. Please call the Lakota Country Times and leave your phone number. My business partner, Barb, and I would like to help you with your life and your body problems. We are healers. Let us help you.

You can email Anna Bee your questions at lakota1868@gwtc.net or fax to (605) 685-1870, or write to PO Box 386, Martin, S.D. 57551.

Council gives Twiss six more months

HUD representatives stress stability, continuity

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - After a two hour executive session on Friday, during the regular session of the Oglala Sioux Tribal Council meeting, the council voted 14-0 to table council representative Garfield Little Dog's motion to remove Chief of Police James Twiss.

Little Dog, judiciary committee chairman, and the judiciary committee brought the removal resolution based on a number of concerns including: authorizing $195,000 to be used as a Christmas bonus for employees of the OST Department of Public Safety, applying inconsistent and unequal disciplinary action concerning police officers and employees, favoring certain police officers, failing to address complaints from the general public in a timely and efficient manner, allowing poor leadership to exist within the internal affairs division, failing to attend community meetings when attendance was requested in writing and failing to consistently seek additional funding necessary to maintain the department.

Cora Whiting, council representative from Medicine Root District, made the motion which was seconded by Kim Claussen of LaCreek and included that the subject would be revisited in October and an evaluation of the chief's performance would be completed before the October meeting.

"Now we are all on the same page," said both Whiting and Little Dog "and all of the complaints on police brutality and inconsistent law enforcement will be followed up on through the established system."

"Your words and comments are very much appreciated," said Twiss after hearing the vote that tabled the action to remove him from the job he has held for less than a year, "I certainly do not know everything

Rosebud Ambulance Service is highly efficient in emergency care

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - The Rosebud Ambulance Service operates as an extension of the emergency room services at the Rosebud Comprehensive Healthcare Facility; if the number of evaluations which it undergoes is any indication of its efficiency it is doing great work in emergency patient care.

In fact, with round the clock shifts that are comprised of 6 emergency medical technicians and a dispatcher, the Rosebud Ambulance Service is one of the best in the nation in terms of response time according to Director, Steve Brave.

Todd County poses a rather unique challenge to the ambulance service as it is characterized by some dismal statistics including a high rate of disease, preventable injuries and the lowest life expectancy in the nation.

Brave has led the ambulance service for the last five years and during his total 17 years he has often served as acting director. There have been several directors ever since it got off the ground and was located in the building that now houses the forestry program. It was the first ambulance service in the Aberdeen area and with an average of 5,000 emergency calls per year, it compares favorably with the level of activity that many big city ambulance services experience.

Public relations is important to Brave, however, with direct emergency patient care a priority there is little time for getting the word out as to the successful operation of the "service" as Brave calls it. In our daily affairs no news is good news and perhaps the "service" is deserving of greater support and commendation. Brave is qualified as an EMT at the basic level and has been pressed into service from time to time.

It operates most of the time under budget and Brave has Deputy Assistant Treasury Secretary, Roger Kodat and Attorney Charles Abourezk toured American Horse School and watched the Earth Day Honoring in the AHS gym. Mr. Kodat also addressed the students involved in the innovative one of a kind kids bank.

Student

means American Horse School in Lakota.

These students not only created their own bank but they are running it too. And this is not play money they are dealing with. This is real money, deposited into real saving accounts and accruing real investment interest for account holders.

Not only are they running the day to day operations but they are also writing the curriculum for this innovative program with the intent of sharing it with other reservation schools in the future.

On the bank's website, found at http://www.indian.com/ibank/Winner.htm visitors can see for themselves how the program evolved and it's bold plans stated simply "We are building the future of the Oglala Lakota people through our work."

In the past, the Lakota people depended on the buffalo for subsistence. The buffalo provided food, shelter, tools, entertainment, and more. Now the Lakota nation's future depends on how much Lakota youth can learn that will help "the people" thrive in the world of today.

The American Horse School Bank is a program where youth are helping youth learn about financial self-sufficiency. The project was possible through a federal grant. The bank now has about $2,000 deposits earned and managed by the students.

Students have placed links on their website for secondary students and include other school sites as well as cultural information. Resources for elementary teachers are coming soon.

Several weeks ago, Roger Kodat, a deputy assistant to the United States Treasury, spoke to the students at the school.

You may reach the bank by email at ahssib@ indian.com.

Rabbit, Janis, Colhoff arrested by federal agents

PINE RIDGE - Dave Rabbit, two time past treasurer of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, Eileen Janis, past council representative, assistant treasurer and vice president and currently administrative assistant to John Steele and Kim Colhoff were arrested on Thursday by federal agents and charged in federal court with theft from an Indian tribal organization in 2003 and 2004.

After months of rumors and a long investigation by agents of the Inspector General's office of the Department of Interior, the three tribal members are accused of misapplying, stealing or knowingly converting for their own use, money or property in excess of $1,000.00. Assistant U.S. Bob Mandel said specific amounts of money would not be released until future court hearings.

Rabbit served two consecutive terms as treasurer from 2000-2004; Janis served as assistant treasurer from 2002-2004 and after making the general election as a vice president candidate during the 2004 tribal election, lost to Alex White Plume. Janis moved into the uncompleted vice president's position when White Plume moved into the vacant president's position when Cecelia Fire Thunder was impeached by the tribal council in June of 2006.

No court date has been set for Rabbit, Janis or Colhoff and despite rumors of additional pending arrests, no one else has been arrested at this time.

OST council meets, works and I've found that you are always learning."

If the decision to remove Twiss had been successful, members of the judiciary committee had considered three individuals to possibly serve in an undetermined interim period while the council advertised the chief's position; past COP candidate Grace Her Many Horses, past tribal president Harold Salway and past captain Mitch Wisecarver were all considered.

Three officials from the HUD office in Denver made a presentation to the council as they were wrapping up their three day visit to the Oglala Sioux Lakota Housing offices; they had been to Pine Ridge a year ago and reviewed housing policies and procedures, personnel, finances and reporting practices and had issued a monitoring report that had included 15 findings with specific concerns. Their visit this spring was to review the progress that housing was making on correcting the findings and to make recommendations for the near and far future.

HUD's representatives included Kathy Galt and Carol Chinlin, both grant evaluation specialists and Betty Grass, a member of the Three Affiliated Tribes and a grant management specialist.

"We are not there yet, said Galt, "we have made some progress, we are close to 50 per cent but OSLH will remain on high risk status for the foreseeable future until more progress is made on the findings."

Last year's Monitoring Report on OSLH included concerns about procurement, out of compliance with Davis Bacon and Labor Standards, out of compliance with Indian preference requirements, not maintaining or inspecting units, no current inventory of fixed assets, no total development cost records for each development and renovation project, failure to self monitor in accordance with 24CFR 1000.502, tribal council and board members are not current in re-certifications and rent payments, not complying with tenant and homebuyer selection policies, problems with conflict of interests, not maintaining necessary and reasonable costs, lack of internal controls, not properly accounting for program income, not following policy for payroll advances and employee loans and having a delinquent fiscal audit report.

The HUD visit came at the same time that the council was considering the removal of the board of directors of OSLH and the hiring of a new executive director. After the first three days of the April regular session, the council had not reached those particular agenda items.

Ken Lone Elk's one year contract as executive director ended on March 27; by mutual agreement it was not renewed. The board put Joy Bush in as acting director and re-advertised the executive director's position for another 30 days.

"OSLH needs to maintain stability," said Galt, "housing is still too unstable to be taken off high risk and if further corrections are not made then there is the real possibility of heavier sanctions."

The council opened the planned three day regular session in the council chambers of the Red Cloud building on Wednesday. In three hours of discussion, the council added a number of agenda items and finally approved the agenda early in the afternoon by a vote of 18-0. After reviewing a request to certify the completion and discussing a number of construction problems with the new casino and hotel, the council tabled any action until Mario Gonzalez and casino manager Michael Graham were in attendance.

Paul McManamam, a representative of Invenregy, reported on the progress of the testing going on across the reservation with two anamometers, one placed south of Red Shirt Table and one near the CC Dam north of Allen. McManamam introduced a solar shingle and proposed a test with 100 families on Pine Ridge Reservation, council voted 17-0 to approve.

Fred Sitting Up, past council representative from Eagle Nest District, opened day two of the council meeting with a report from a grass roots treaty organization that were going to form a new government under section 16 of the OST Constitution that the declaration was to go out today, not one against any particular elected government official but more a statement against a system that has failed.

Through the auspices of the Judiciary Committee, staff of the Victims of Crime in Indian Country Assistance Program who were honored recently nationally, were honored by the council with certificates and included Rosalie Janis, director, Linda Bull Bear, Ricky Grey Grass and Lema Richards. On Friday, the council honored Enos Poor Bear Jr. with a flag and an honoring song sung by his brother Harold Salway for all of his efforts in representing the Oglala Sioux Tribe and working with the Little Big Horn National Monument.

Earlier in the day on Friday, the council went into executive session on Prairie Wind Casino and came out with a resolution to authorize the Bureau's criminal investigation division to investigate two tribal programs, passed 16-0. A motion to continue working on Saturday failed 5-10.

Friday afternoon, Mike Jackli, U.S. Attorney for South Dakota spoke to the council and fielded questions from both the council and the community. Jackli expressed an interest in working more closely with the tribe, to continue to work on dealing with the growing influence of drugs and violence in the community and to keep good avenues of communication open with the tribe and law enforcement agencies on the reservation.

The Education Committee brought a resolution to limit the number of paid school board meetings allowed to 24 in a year including regular, special and budget. The council approved the resolution 17-0-1. Motion by Carol O'Rourke and seconded by Garfield Little Dog to allocate the two per cent right to work fee to the tribal department of education, passed 13-5 and the council approved a resolution adding Jake Little to the education committee, 17-1.

The council voted 16-0-2 to move the Dam Safety tribal program from economic and business development to the land committee and voted 18-0 to 638 the construction of the new dorm at Pine Ridge school.

The council closed out the three days by approving district elections.

By a vote of 13 for, none against and one not voting, the council approved the Wounded Knee District election including Victorio Camp/president, Winona Ross/vice president, Donna Jumping Eagle/Secretary, Corinna White Whirlwind/ treasurer, Sherman Desersa/ sergeant at arms-critic, David Kelly/credit board, Thomas Harvey/Parks board, Phillip Jumping Eagle/gaming commissioner and Frank Bob Ecoffey/transportation board.

By a vote of 14-0 the council approved Oglala elections including Wilmer Buzz Youngman Sr./president, Frank Two Bulls Sr./vice president, Lois White Whirlwind/treasurer, Hilda Two Bulls/secretary, Youngman/gaming commission, and Dirk Garnier/transportation.

By a vote of 10-4 the council approved the LaCreek election including Sally Douthit/chairwoman, Charles Bettelyoun/vice chairman, Agnes Cummimgs/secretary, Donna Lamont/treasurer, Pearl Cottier/gaming commission, Harold Chip Brown Bull/Parks and Charlene Bush/credit board.

Pass Creek and Porcupine District election reports were not complete yet and the council decided to continue the regular session at the casino on Wednesday, May 2.

On May 2, the council met at the old Prairie Winds Casino structure and after one agenda item, retured back to the Red Cloud building due to an electric outage.

That agenda item was the proposed child and family code.

The council approved of the ordiance enacting the code of a vote of 16-0. The motion was by Carol Crazy Thunder and seconded by Kim Claussen.

A number of people spoke in favor of the code, including Garfield Little Dog and Craig Dillon.

The presenters of the Child and Family Code (Wakanyeja Na Tiospaye T Woope) also referred to as the family code.

The motion included 120 days for agencies to be compliant.

Those presenting to the council were Arlana Bettelyoun, Gloria Cournеyor and Dr. Elgin Bad Wound.

The code has been written and developed in the last five years through several groups and many community meetings.

The code addresses depended and neglected children with their families but doesn't address juvenil delinquency.

The council tabled certification fo the Pass Creek district elections 16-0.

President Steele asked approval from the council to pursue Shakopee monies to acquire FEMA trailers for housing for the tribe. The motion passed 14-2.

Sen. Johnson returns home

WASHINGTON - Sen. Tim Johnson (D-S.D.) has returned to his Fairfax County home this week, after four months of hospitalization triggered by a brain hemorrhage that threatened his life and pulled him from the Senate.

Johnson, 60, will continue outpatient physical and speech therapy five days a week at two Washington area facilities, spokeswoman Julianne Fisher said yesterday. Physicians have not estimated when he might return to work, she said.

Johnson, who is trying to regain strength on the right side of his body, was released from the National Rehabilitation Hospital in the District on Friday.

He is using a wheelchair while he learns to walk again. He will eventually shift to a motorized scooter when he returns to work, Fisher said.

Rosebud

learned the art of budgeting on the job as he is able to reconcile the differing funding sources which support ambulance service operation. The bulk of its funding originates from the Indian Health Service by way of the Rosebud Hospital, in addition to some casino funding and third party payments.

"Our last evaluation from the Aberdeen Area Office indicated we had good marks and were fulfilling our 638 contract. I submit monthly reports to the tribal health board. Our number one priority is service to the people. This is the people's program." said Brave.

If the ambulance service were fully funded it would take an annual budget of $1,400,000 dollars to support its operation, however, it operates on about fifty percent of its projected financial needs. The factors which compound its financial needs are the fact that it conducts a lot of inter-facility transfers as a part of its 638 contractual obligations and the volume of local emergency calls. Both scenarios require a lot of man hours, diesel fuel and translate into a tremendous drain on much needed resources.

A breakdown of ambulance service personnel includes 16 EMT's at the basic level, 7 EMT's at the intermediate level and 14 paramedics who are qualified at the advanced level and are able to dispense drugs, intubate patients and prepare them with IV's. There are also five drivers, four dispatchers and an assistant director. Donna Richards fills that position.

The building in which it is housed in appears to be able to accommodate 6-8 ambulances, however, Brave said that they have outgrown the facilities and there are plans in place to build a larger facility west of the present site. The cost for a new building is estimated to be $750,000 dollars. Since the ambulances run on diesel fuel they must be kept indoors during the winter cold, otherwise the diesel will thicken and jell, making them difficult to start if they were outside. Some ambulance services do not have a building and this necessitates that they be kept running continuously and this not only runs into greater expense, but also is a source of pollution to the atmosphere.

For EMT's who have unusually stressful experiences in their emergency care there is a critical stress management team available for debriefing of personnel. There are also counselors available at the Rosebud Hospital, while others simply work at confronting and reducing such stresses on their own.

When asked about their other standby functions Brave said, "We are present at health fairs, the elder Olympics, local rodeos, and walks and runs. We support our youth, we give tours and also talk in the schools."

The ambulance service also provides "mutual aid" to surrounding communities and, in fact, was called to Pine Ridge last summer to assist during a tornado. They have also been the recipient of equipment from the Homeland Security Office including a "Jaws of Life" device, hand-held radios and a surveillance system for the building.

Finally, the Rosebud Ambulance Service appears to be doing a highly professional job of providing first responder services to a population base that is estimated to be around 25,000 Sicangu tribal members. With an 800 number in place, community members do not have to call 9-1-1 for emergency services and, thus, response time is cut down. In fact, having their own dispatcher in the same building results in a response time of less than five minutes and that is the critical factor in saving lives and providing medical intervention on-site prior to transport.

The program provides technical assistance in the following areas;

1. The BIA Loan Guaranty program; this is another financial resource towards small business development;

2. Intake, retention and recording of mortgage packages; another financial resource for building or purchasing a home and business development;

3. It provides payroll deduction loans to employees;

4. it is developing a debit card program for tribal members and it's employees and

5. the program assists the Credit Board in developing small business activities.

One area that the program will begin implementing in conjunction with the Credit Board is meeting with districts and community boards to develop a comprehensive land use plan for economic development opportunities.

OST transit program tentatively plans ground breaking ceremony in June

With the current contract award, the Oglala Sioux Tribe Department of Transportation anticipates the start up of transit services by late summer or early fall. A ground breaking ceremony is tentatively being scheduled for June 1 for the transit office, which will be built in the current road shop compound located east of Pine Ridge.

Initial funding is in place for the constructon of the 22,500 square feet transit facility and the purchase of four (22 passenger) buses and five (16 passenger) vans. The proposed routes are main line: Wanblee/Kyle, Sharps Corner/Porcupine, Wounded Knee to Pine Ridge to Oglala and Prairie Winds. Fares for riding the buses range from $10 to $1.

Transit program employees are Emma Featherman-Sam, coordinator and Renita Quick Bear, office manager and plans to hire transit liaison, bus drivers, two dispatchers and a bus mechnanic.

School Nurses Day May 9

Pine Ridge area school nurses total 136 years of service

By Audrey Beaudreau, RN
Special to the Times

KYLE - Nation School Nurses Day was established n 1972 to foster a better understanding of the role of school nurses in the educational setting.

As in the past, National School Nurses Day falls on the Wednesday during National Nurses Week, May 6-12, ending on the birthday of Florence Nightingale, the founder of nursing.

More than 100 years ago, the very first school nurse, Lina Rogers Stuthers, was sent to a New York City school to address infectious disease control.

Upon the success that she had reducing absenteeism in schools, the number of nurses increased.

In the 21st century, diseases are different, but the message remains the same; "Healthy Children Learn Better."

Today, approximately 50,000 school nurses across the United States provide essential infectious disease monitoring and prevention to ensure a healthy school population.

In addition, school nurse provide necessary case management and care for children who have chronic health problems such as asthma, diabetes, obesity and food allergies.

Schools and communities are encouraged to join with their school nurse in celebrating what they do on a daily basis to keep our kids healthy and ready to learn.

The Pine Ridge Reservation Schools have seven school nurses and two nurse aides that provide health care to our Lakota school children, they are as followed;

Virginia Lawrence RN, 11 years, Wolf CreekSchool

*Audrey Beaudreau RN, 3 years,Little Wound School

Donita Little Whiteman, LPN, 11 years, Little Wound School

Judy Miles LPN, 15 years, Batesland

Marlene Backs LPN, 24 years Loneman School

Leola Quiver LPN, 7 years Crazy Horse School, 7 years Little Wound School

Janice Afraid Of Hawk, LPN, 18 years, Wounded Knee District

Wanda Richards NA, 9 years Rocky Ford School

Chrisy O'Donnell NA, 10 years, Wolf Creek School

We also need to take this day to remember our fellow School Nurses that have journeyed to the Spirit World who showed excellence in providing our children with nursing care;

Juanita White Eyes RN spent 8 years at American Horse School as their School Nurse

Wilma Herman RN spent 13 year as a School Nurse at Toyie, Arizona and 3 years as a School Nurse at American Horse School.

Cangleska Inc. opens new shelter, grand opening May 4

KYLE - Cangleska, Inc. celebrates the grand opening of a new shelter on Friday, May 4 while celebrating the 10-year anniversary of opening the doors to its first Native women's shelter on the Oglala Sioux reservation.

The new shelter is part of a newly constructed $1.35 million 9-acre complex on the Pine Ridge reservation which includes a $1.25 million shelter, the Tokahe Wicayapi Visitation Center and a new maintenance building.

The new 7,800-square-foot shelter will comfortably house up to 36 women and children as well as office and meeting space for the administrative and counseling services of the organization.

"Cangleska is honored to be able to offer safe and comfortable space for women and children in crisis. The new shelter will offer women who have been victimized by domestic violence and/or sexual assault an opportunity to examine options, the time needed to plan for a life without violence, a life of dignity and safety for themselves and their children.

The new shelter is beautiful and a dream come true," said Karen Artichoker, Director of Cangleska, Inc.

"I'm excited and I was impressed. The new shelter was designed with women and children in mind. I didn't know people had thought of us. People really do have a heart," said a woman residing in present shelter when she was allowed to tour the new place she will stay.

Cangleska Inc. opened the doors to its existing shelter, a leased building owned by the Oglala Sioux Tribe, on April 1, 1997. The nonprofit also operates Ohitika Najin Win (Standing Strong Woman House), a second shelter in Rapid City.

The organization, which has a 20 year history of grassroots work in responding to domestic violence on the Pine Ridge reservation, is considered the national model for domestic violence programs and is a 1999 Innovations in American Government winner through Harvard University and the Ford Foundation. It has provided comprehensive domestic violence and sexual assault advocacy and related services to citizens of the Oglala Sioux Tribe living on and near the Pine Ridge Reservation since 1989.

In addition, Cangleska Inc. provides outreach advocacy services, probation services, civil legal services, a men's re-education program, an integrated criminal justice system, and coordinated response and training.

It operates Sacred Circle, the National Resource Center To End Violence Against Native Women, which provides technical assistance, consultation, and training to Indian Tribes and organizations in developing strategies and remedies to end violence against Native women.

Funding for the new shelter was made possible with loans, grants, donations and labor from the USDA Rural Development, Oglala Sioux Tribe, Medicine Root District, All Tribes Foundation, Jane Fonda, Rosanne Barr Foundation, Native American Bank, Shakopee Mdewakanton Sioux Community, V-Day and Eve Ensler.

"The loan funds represent one way in which the federal government can help small communities provide services to those in need. Our agency is pleased to be a part of today's ceremony to recognize those who are dedicated to providing empowerment and safety to victims of violence," said Mike Jaspers, USDA Rural Development State Director.

Native workers did at least 98 percent of the labor for the new complex. The building contractors included Sod's Mechanical Contracting , Hahn's Construction, Murdock's Electric, Rapid Fire, and R&D Redimix.

Thoughts that come from the heart

What is 'signage'?

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett

EDITOR AND PUBLISHER
LAKOTA COUNTRY TIMES

In traveling around Pine Ridge and Rosebud, it's always so grand to see new business cropping up or expanding. It brings a sense of pride to the heart.

It also brings to mind, the work and commitment that is needed to make that new business or expansion prosper. It takes work and that goes not only for the businesses that have a building but for the budding entrepreneur. It takes hustling, dedication and creativity to make a business grow, regardless if it is just selling your crafts at the various offices and stores or whoever will buy it, all to way to having to deal with government politics to lease land for a business. It takes work.

In this newspaper, our readers see all kinds of advertising and the majority of these advertisers are from that vein. They are committed to making their businesses successful and that is why they are advertising here in the paper.

They want your business and that is part of our economic development - to buy from hometown. Remember that when you travel through the reservations, contribute to that economy even if it is just stopping for gas, pop and chips.

If you want people to come to your business, you have to let them know. Recently, we visited several new businesses that just opened and it was cool to see the excitement in the faces of the entrepreneurs.

But I am never ceased to be surprised when I ask them if I could do an article on the opening of their business, it's free I say, this time around and they refuse. I tell them, we will let people know you are open for business and what you have here, I try to convince them and they ask me to wait or tell me they will do it later.

It's called signage or advertising your business or your services you have to have. Rather it be radio or print advertising or just setting up a bold, inviting sign in front of your business.

Just about everybody knows about Wall Drug, the tourist attraction in Wall, along I-90. You know why we all know? Because Wall Drug earned much of its fame from its self-promotion. Signs advertising the stores can be seen for hundreds of miles throughout South Dakota and in the adjoining states and it goes further than that too, those famous signs can be see in other countries.

Do advertising within your budget, but remember the way you are going to get business is to let people know. That goes for our service organizations too, like the tribal programs and the schools.

I know of this really great restaurant on the way to Rapid City. They have just the greatest food and the nicest service. I love going there when I can afford it, it feels great to eat there, especially on the reservation, where we don't have a lot of great eateries.

There are times, I sit there enjoying my meal and I watch the cars whiz by and I think of them, wondering if they know about the great meal I am having at that moment. I am sitting there enjoying my creamy mashed potatoes with gravy with the most delicious roast beef and a cup of the best coffee around.

The reason they would know is because of the building itself, and a medium sized sign by the highway that has the word, 'restaurant' on it.

I know because I live here.

Learn what signage is about and use it, even if its just ballons hanging on your fence to advertise your yard sale.

It works!

Words from the 'trenches'

Melanie, Tom's work at KILI worth it!

Ever see that commercial on television with the people suffering from allergy congestion and the congestion causes these people to see the world through a slight fog, with everything looking out of focus? That's how the rez community has felt this last year with KILI radio station unplugged and on "low" power.

Connie Smith-Blanco

Life without KILI radio has been like having the only lamp in your house hidden under a bushel basket with the light bulb burned out. Yes, KILI is that important to young and old alike around here, and KILI's silence has been noted in everyone's heart this past year.

Amanda and I visited with Melanie and the crew at the station last week and they were hard at work and loving every minute of it. Many of us out here in radioland have been counting the minutes, wringing our hands and moaning about KILI's silence. But guess what? The people moaning the loudest have been Melanie and Tom and the crew at the KILI radio.

This off air time has been no picnic for those responsible in giving KILI its much needed facelift and overdue maintenance. Can you imagine being promised time after time "just one more little fix and you're ready to broadcast to the heavens" only to be told again and again, "no, really, just 'one' more fix".

Melanie and Tom live for this radio station and it has broken their hearts to see this maintenance and equipment upgrade ordeal take so much longer then they expected.

Did anyone ever think how "congested and out of focus" their lives have been all this time. This whole process has been a rickety roller coaster ride for everyone working at KILI radio.

We must give credit to those folks who have been working quietly (and not so quietly) in the background. They never gave up on KILI Radio, even when that roller coaster ride came to a screeching halt. They believed they could make KILI bigger and better and that's just what they accomplished.

Melanie and Tom make running a radio station look so easy, when in fact it is one of the hardest jobs on the reservation. They may have been off the air but they were still there for the community working through the phone lines that never stopped ringing.

But by golly they are back! Amanda and I listened to the live broadcast of the recent OST Council meeting and it was awesome. Finally, everything is back out in the open. No secrets, no back door deals just real live news. It was great.

This week I listened to community members as they took part in the four directions walk for the Month of the Child that KILI helps sponsor each year. I was also able to listen to the employees of Cangleska, Inc. as they proudly announced the forthcoming open house of their new facility in Kyle. The live radio broadcast took place in the conference room of their brand new facility, and everyone told their story of a dream that began 10 years ago, how the dream went through years of struggles to obtain financing, overcoming the obstacles and mazes of the mountains of government and state documentation needed for such a specialized facility.

I could actually hear the pride in the voices of people like Jesse Claussen who helped build the 7,000 sq. ft. facility with "98 percent of hard working tribal members." It made me proud just to listen to this success story right here on the reservation.

I also got to hear Jeannette Eagle Hawk, OST Public Relations proudly update radio land in English and Lakota. Announcing OST President John Steel's present and future plans for the Oglala Nation. You could hear the strength in her voice as she read the list of upcoming tribal events complete with dates and times.

The light is no longer under the bushel basket, there's a brand new high powered light bulb and the fuzziness of this last year has dissolved into clear, concrete information. KILI radio makes that possible for me and all the listeners out there who want to hear the truth as it happens, unbiased, unfiltered, un-political and clear as a bell.

Thank you Tom, Melanie and the entire crew at KILI radio, including the deejays!

You are making it possible for the light to shine all over the reservation and we owe it to your hard work and unfailing spirit and teamwork. That's the truth and that's how I see and hear it, here in the trenches.

Notes From Indian Country

The 'Poorest County in America'

By Tim Giago

(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

The United States Census of 1980 moved in a different direction when it began to post a census within a census on different social conditions in the United States.

For instance, the Census of 1980 named the 10 poorest counties in America.

The Pine Ridge Reservation, situated in the heart of Shannon County, South Dakota, was declared the "Poorest County in America." It was one occasion when a people had no reason at all to stand up and shout, "Hey, we're number one!"

To address the extreme poverty on many Indian reservations let's, for the moment, set aside the financial boomtowns of the casino rich Indian nations. We should keep in mind that while some Indian nations have become extremely wealthy, many others, particularly those in the Northern Plains and in some portions of the Southwest, have remained the poorest of the poor in an otherwise booming Indian economy.

While most of the Pueblo Nations of New Mexico are having great success with their casinos, there are others like the Jemez Pueblo that do not have the luxury of being located on or near a major city or highway. And there are others that have decided not to open a casino, at least for the time being. While most Arizona Indian nations are booming, there are others such as the Navajo that are just now starting to make a move toward opening a casino and there is the Hopi Nation, made up of extremely traditional and religious people that are not considering building a casino at all.

In the Northern Plains tribes such as the Oglala Lakota on the Pine Ridge Reservation, the object of the 1980 Census naming them the "poorest county in America," the Sicangu of the Rosebud Reservation, the Crow Creek Sioux tribe and the tribes of North Dakota and Montana, are situated so far from a metropolitan population that although they do have functional casinos, are still struggling to survive.

We have to ask ourselves why, after 27 years since the 1980 Census, the Pine Ridge Reservation is still among the top ten poorest counties in America, and why three of the top ten poorest counties are located in South Dakota? What does that say about our elected Congressional delegation?

It doesn't take a rocket scientist to know the reasons there is such poverty and what can be done to alleviate it. The lack of jobs, housing and healthcare are three of the main culprits. And how does one go about addressing these ills? First off, you bring economic development to provide jobs and second, you demand that Housing and Urban Development get off of its big fat ass and provide livable housing, and third, you refurbish the Indian Health Care hospitals with adequate funding, improved facilities and more and better doctors. Doesn't this sound like something that can be accomplished in America?

Life expectancy on Pine Ridge, Rosebud, and Crow Creek and on some of the other Indian reservations of the Northern Plains and in some areas of the Southwest is in the 50s. Infant mortality is three times as high as in the rest of America. Diabetes is epidemic in Indian country no thanks to the United States Department of Agriculture for the high starch and sugar- loaded commodities distributed on these reservations for so many years.

I visited Andrew Cuomo in Washington, DC when he as the Secretary of HUD. Cuomo had visited the Pine Ridge Reservation in 2000 and lining the walls of his HUD office and hallways were enlarged photographs of Lakota people huddled in decrepit houses as many as four families to a two-bedroom house. Why were the pictures hanging on his walls when the very conditions they depicted are still prevalent on the Pine Ridge Reservation seven years later? While I sat in his office sipping coffee, Cuomo had his eye glued to the television set watching the latest count of "hanging chads" in Florida's election. He listened to me with half an ear.

I was in Cuomo's office to help bring jobs to the Pine Ridge Reservation. I told him I was willing to move my newspaper and printing plant to the reservation, along with 35 jobs, if he would see fit to have HUD build a facility to house it and contribute enough money to enable me to move the entire operation. Of course, nothing happened because Florida and the U. S. Supreme Court saw to it that Andrew Cuomo lost his job at HUD. Would it have made a difference if he had not?

The problems on the above reservations still exist and it is high time that our elected representatives move, in collusion with the private sector, to bring an economy to these very poor Indian reservations. It is time they fought for legislation to bring houses and better healthcare to the poorest of the poor in America.

Finding My Voice

On being a 'skin'

Dana Lone Hill

The following is the opinion of one skin...me. Not all skins everywhere. If any offense is taken, I apologize beforehand.

Wednesday: "Wait, we can not break bread with you. You have taken the land which is rightfully ours. Years from now my people will be forced to live in mobile homes on reservations. Your people will wear cardigans, and drink highballs.

We will sell our bracelets by the road sides, and you will play golf, and eat hot h'ors d'ourves. My people will have pain and degradation. Your people will have stick shifts. The gods of my tribe have spoken. They said do not trust the pilgrims, especially Sarah Miller. And for all of these reasons I have decided to scalp you and burn your village to the ground."

That was from the movie The Addams Family Values. I remember when I first saw that I was like, should I be offended? Then I was like, why? It's the truth.

"Dana, my lone hill from the west. I think you're a wonderful blogger who has open your doors with a peek into your "western" world.

You have done a great deal of shedding away my stereotypes of the West and the American Indians. Before, I had grand Bonanza images and Roy Rogers wonderments which have all been diminished. Thanks. grin"

That was a comment from Eddo the other day in this blog. It is amazing that some people do have these stereotypes still to this day. Once when I worked mail order for a native arts and crafts store, The Sioux Trading Post, I had a TV show from Japan call me. The viewer had just saw Dances With Wolves and they had a few questions for me.

The standard, "How is it to live in a teepee?" "Do you still ride horses?" "Do you hunt buffalo" If any of you are wondering the answer for all of those is NO.

I see people that do beadwork, sell their native crafts and have a story for every piece. It is always so romantic in a way, "oh I had a dream or vision of this design." or "The little triangle here represent a mountain by a lake and where the eagles live"

People eat that up. I wish I could say I dream up designs. I think them up. I don't sit on a hill and dream of them. Actually as much as beading strains my eyes the last thing I want to do is dream of it. I sit on my chair and watch TV as I bead, the colors might match something I saw on TV.

I once had a friend who was a pothead and would go to work stoned. He would bullshit the tourists for everything he sold, like holding a dream catcher above a pregnant women's belly and telling her she was going to have a boy because it spun to the west. Man, did he have the sales.

We are Indian, some like to be called Native, which to me can mean you are from anywhere.

Everyone is Native to somewhere. I don't care for the term Native American because some people get all upset and say "well I was born here too." I know the whole deal with the word Indian, but I don't mind it. We call ourselves "Skins."

It is one of those words only a true skin, born and raised on the reservation knows. Only real skins call each other skin. It is like a test you pass.

Once when I was bartending, the most handsome skin (I thought) came up to me. He had that slow, warm, wonderful Oklahoma accent, that reminds me of honey pouring.

He asked for a Budweiser, I was like "Yeah he could be a skin?"

Then he leaned over and said in that sexy drawl, "You a skin?" I was like "Yes." then I knew he was a skin.

He smiled at me with the most wonderful teeth that any IHS dental clinic would be proud of. That is what I mean by skins identifying each other.

We always have people coming up to us and say "Well my great great grandma on my moms side was a Cherokee princess." I always respond in my smart ass way, "Well my great great grandma on my moms side was from France."

When they say "So" I am like "Exactly." Just a note for anyone who may have heard that story about their relatives being princesses. Indians didn't have royalty....still don't. The government of the people in North America was democratic, much like the one today. A chief was not a king. His son didn't automatically step up unless elected.

You have the city skins who are always trying to identify with that side of them.

They hang blankets and pictures of chiefs on their walls. Then you have the rez skins who hang blankets for curtains and maybe sold their pics of chiefs to their relatives from the city.

Being a skin in this day and age is just like being anyone else, regardless of what people think, we pay taxes, we watch football, we bet, we have our gay and lesbians, we have whores, we have saints, we have virgins, (huh?) we have smokers and non smokers, we have alcoholism and sobriety, smart asses and dumb asses, we have social drinkers and non drinkers, we have athletes and diabetics, we have bitches and we have good people.

Really being a skin is like being any other people. So we may be a bit more spiritual, yes we are. But that doesn't mean we are saints. Or we see the future.

Or we can tell you what to do with your life. (I mean I can, I can totally bull---- and make people believe me, but that would get old and boring after awhile.)

Then you wouldn't know the real me.

I have titled this blog "On Being a Skin" I will continue it someday, so you all know what it is really like to be a skin, especially since I moved back to the reservation.

This was a blog I wrote a while back that offended, of all people, one of my best friends. Jase, I am not re-posting this to get you mad. I am only re-posting it because I still feel this way.

As for the mascot issue, I feel there are many, many more pressing issues to do with Indian Country today, than worry about some mascot that offends me.

Like I said I don't care. In fact, I wore my Cleveland Indians jersey because of the fact that it said Indians.

And like I said about the North Dakota Fightin Sioux, it is better than being called the Docile Sioux.

Okay, so I am putting this out there, I hope nobody gets offended, if you do then that's your fault for letting me control your emotions.

Yes I am Native American/Indian...whatever. The tribe is Oglala Lakota Sioux, I do beadwork, I sell it wholesale in bulk to retail shops. I do NOT make gold chains, 18KT, I don't even own one.

I cannot make a dress, I don't even wear them. I hardly ever do special orders because I have so many orders backed up right now that I will not stop, take time out to make one pair of earrings and send them to Spain and wait for a check, (I still think that was a prank, didn't work).

I am from a spiritual and cultural people, that doesn't mean I know why the wind blows in the trees, or why eagles fly. I don't know why you hear drums, maybe there's a Jumanji board around somewhere. I don't care if Kansas City calls it's team Chiefs or Atlanta call their team the Braves.

I am not even a fan of either anyway, I like the Vikings and don't see anybody complaining about that. I am actually kind of evil minded and come from a long line of evil minded women.

I am not Pocahontas and don't run around with a raccoon and sing to the Blue Corn Moon, though that would be darn funny if I did.

I am just me, I embrace my culture, am proud of my heritage, do my beadwork, and am evil minded, so don't ask why the sun looked red today, I will tell you it's because your eyes are bloodshot.

By the way, as I am typing this it looks like I am mad, I just want you all to know I am smiling.

Dana Lone Hill is a 34-year old mother of 4, who recently moved back to the reservation, after an eternity on the housing waiting list. Although currently self-employed, she plans on continuing her education at the Oglala Lakota College.

White Buffalo: commitment needed to teach language

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

The graduate studies department at Oglala Lakota College held a colloquium on Saturday for students who are completing the thesis phase of their master's degree. It was the final opportunity for graduate students to showcase their work and explain the practical research portion of their degree requirements. It's an important step in providing a capstone to their graduate experience. I was there as I sat on Devonna Bush's committee. She did an interesting concept on behaviors in the classroom and ways to combat them.

I was employed there for a brief stint and couldn't make the commute as much as they would have liked, so, I was unceremoniously non-renewed and am still awaiting my going away star quilt.

Institutions have personalities, too, and many can act in a co-dependent manner. When contract time is up in the spring, you can observe that interesting phenomenon quite routinely.

Instead of recruiting some of our finer and younger Lakota educators into our schools, we recycle some of the outsiders and accept them back into other schools. Go figure! as they say in mainstream America.

I still get asked to assist graduate students, especially during that all important thesis stage and I will if it is appropriate and it isn't a strain on my "life in the slow lane" as I like to call it.

In actuality, I enjoy listening to some of the more interesting topics that graduate students find engaging.

When I earned my war bonnet in 1991 for having served in Vietnam, I was told that I was to honor any request for assistance from the people and I try to do that. I recently agreed to assist another graduate student.

OLC Lakota Studies instructor, Charlie White Buffalo made his presentation on a survey which he conducted at several schools relative to Lakota language and the extent to which it is being taught.

He was forceful and convincing in illustrating some important reminders about the survival of the Lakota language.

He was rather emphatic in noting that though we have lost many elders who we used to be able to utilize as resources for correctness in Lakota, we still have the opportunity to teach the Lakota that is here to our children.

What is needed in Charlie's opinion is a commitment to the teaching of Lakota even though it may not pay a lot of money.

In his survey he discovered that each school examined seemed to devote differing times and resources to the teaching of Lakota. There was a need to create uniformity in what is taught, but not necessarily any kind of standards. We should not require each district to teach it exactly the same way. The reason is that there are differences in dialect from one end of the Pine Ridge to the other and we should include all the ways in which to write or pronounce a word instead of chastising others if they say it their way.

When asked about fluency he noted that anyone can be fluent and speak Lakota, but the true test is when one is considered proficient and is able to relate the deeper meaning to others and make them understand.

Defending a master's thesis such as those student were able to do is just one indicator that they have partially fulfilled the requirements toward their graduate degree and, thus, are nearing the completion of their long journey which is meant to transform their way of thinking forever.

When I defended my thesis at Harvard it was a final opportunity for my committee to make suggestions in a private setting with only the four of us present.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) resides on the Rosebud with his son, Beaux. He earned a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) from Harvard University. A decorated Vietnam Veteran, he is functionally literate in Lakota and worked at Sinte Gleska University for 20 years as Dean/Chair of Tribal and Graduate Studies.

Poorest county

Cheyenne, Oklahoma to commemorate those slaughtered at the Washita and I asked that South Dakota's delegation come up with the funds to build a cultural center at the site of the Wounded Knee Massacre. I got an email from former Senator Tom Daschle asking, "what can I do?" and a phone call from the assistant for Senator Tim Johnson telling me that Senator Johnson was behind the idea 100 percent. I have yet to hear from Congresswoman Stephanie Herseth Sandlin (D-SD) or from Senator John Thune (R-SD).

The extreme need for jobs, housing and healthcare are still requisite on the Indian reservations of the Northern Plains and Southwest, but finding the funds to construct a Cultural Heritage Center on the site of one of the worst massacres in American history would go a long way in showing what our elected representatives, in cooperation with the leadership of the Lakota people, can do to make a move in the right direction.

After that perhaps they can devote some time to helping alleviate the conditions that made Pine Ridge "the poorest county in America."

RST professional's day was good for employee morale

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - The RST administrative professional's day held at the Rosebud Casino on April 25 was not a new thing for RST employees, but as a morale builder, there were several people talking about its positive aspects and the fun held by all.

The opportunity to get out of the office, socialize with fellows employees and generally have fun is always a way to re-focus one's priorities and keep issues in perspective. For most employees, the work will always be there and for RST employees the door prizes and the fun walk around the casino grounds was surpassed only by the good food and the $100.00 each Secretary, Receptionist, Clerk was given in appreciation for their dedication.

RST Personnel office is responsible for the affair each year, Benny Kitteaux, Director, Jennifer Crow Eagle, Administrative Assistant and Thelma Black Crow, Clerk. This year a Committee was formed by those interested in making this year a memorable Day. The departments which contributed their help included Brenda Moran of the RST Education Department, Julie Peneaux of the RST President's office, Lisa of the SWA Corporation, Sherri Knox of RST Business Office, Valerie Crazy Bull, of RST Gaming Office and Marie Flying, of Employee Assistance Program.

Lakota Elder Roy Stone started the Day with a Morning Prayer. The emcee for the event was Sicangu musician, Skeeter Leader Charge, who also provided his fine brand of music that Rosebud has come to expect. The RST Diabetes Prevention Program provided tee shirts to the 167 people who participated in the morning Walk, while John Spotted Tail of the RST President's office presented certificates to employees.

Pat Bad Hand of the Red Leaf singers sang an honoring song, while RST Antelope council representative, Robert Moore, gave a rousing and encouraging talk to those employees present. Employees were then treated to a dinner which featured three options, while RST President, Rodney M. Bordeaux also gave an appreciate address to employees.

Black Crow said that those employees participating appreciated the tribal administration being present for the festivities, namely President Bordeaux, Vice-President Wayne Boyd who participated in the morning Walk, Roy Stone, Leon Thunder Hawk, and Russell Running Horse.

RST employee, Vanessa White Lance, from the RST in-house attorney's office comes to the stage during last week's administrative professional's day held at the Rosebud Casino. Julie Peneaux from the RST President's office is in the foreground.

Early morning drug raid nets 44

MOBRIDGE - The culmination of two years of investigations netted nearly 40 people on various charges throughout Mobridge and the Standing Rock and Cheyenne River Reservation on Tuesday, April 24, as federal agents and local law enforcement officers staged early morning raids.

More than 60 officers from federal, state, county and local law enforcement agencies descended on Mobridge before 6 a.m., setting the stage for a well planned operation to arrest 44 people indicted on charges ranging from possession of marijuana and paraphernalia, to federal charges.

Officers of the Bureau of the Indian Affairs from the Standing Rock Sioux Tribe, and the police departments of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe, the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe, the Lower Brule Sioux Tribe, the Mellette County Sheriff's Office, the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, the U.S. Marshal's Service and the South Dakota Game, Fish and Parks Service, U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration, the Walworth County Sheriff's Office, the Campbell County Sheriff's Office, the Bismarck Mandan Safe Trails Drug Enforcement Task Force, the South Dakota National Guard Counter Drug Program and the South Dakota Highway Patrol joined the Task Force in their efforts to arrest those indicted in the Mobridge and Wakpala area.

The operation lasted nearly the entire morning, with 35 of the 44 people indicted arrested and processed in the Mobridge Fire Hall, which was transformed into the headquarters of the operation.

Walker said once the indictments are filed and those arrested make their first court appearances, names and charges they are facing will be released.

Those who were not arrested have active warrants and law enforcement officials will continue to pursue those individuals until they are arrested.

Law enforcement is aware of the whereabouts of some of those indicted and will continue until the operation is complete.

The people have been indicted on state and federal drug charges following a two-year investigation that began in Mobridge.

The charges relate to a variety of controlled substances, including methamphetamine.

Impacted Nations: Red Cloud Heritage center host exhibit

PINE RIDGE - The Heritage Center at Red Cloud Indian School in Pine Ridge will be hosting the traveling art exhibition "Impacted Nations" from April 27 through May 28. The show was organized by Honor the Earth, a not-for-profit organization whose mission is to create awareness and support for Native environmental issues and to develop needed financial and political resources for the survival of sustainable Native communities. Impacted Nations is a Native art exhibit illuminating the devastating impacts of energy development in Native America and positive alternatives for the future. With more than 50 pieces of artwork spanning the continent, the exhibit features contemporary fine art by Native American artists from across the country, and includes sculpture, paintings, monotype prints, baskets, and mixed media art, including local Lakota artists Donald Montileaux and Dwayne Wilcox.

Impacted Nations is an artistic collaboration that portrays the conflict between Native peoples' cultural and spiritual relationship to the earth and the political and economic forces that undermine that relationship and their ways of life. As seen in the artists' interpretations of dams, oil exploration, coal mining, and nuclear power, the United States' energy policy has, for decades, negatively impacted Native communities.

This art exhibit focuses also on places and lands that are sacred to Native peoples. These sites are not only a part of our history, but they are also a part of our present lives and the lives of generations to come.

Impacted Nations has travel across the United States to cities such as New York City, Minneapolis, Minn. and Santa Fe, N.M. In addition, the exhibit will be in reservation communities that have been affected firsthand by the deadly legacy of energy development on their communities by energy development. The exhibit can be viewed at The Heritage Center Gallery at the Red Cloud Indian School Campus Monday through Friday, 8 a.m. - 5 p.m. For more information please call The Heritage Center at 605-867-5491, ext. 218.

Essays on parents written by TCHS alternative center

MISSION - Last February, Sharon Swift of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe's Caregivers Program was troubled over the recent suicides on the Rosebud and decided to engage high schools in the Todd County School District's alternative center to create essays about the elderly. Swift met with Wayne King, project director of the alternative center and arranged to have the center's student attend an elder's conference held on February 20 at the SGU multipurpose building.

As the students met and talked with the elders, they decided that they would instead write essays on the desirable qualities that they wanted to see in their parents. Parents are often seen as the missing link in many children's lives and it was an appropriate exercise. The essays were not graded; however, King said that it was a good opportunity for students to reflect and 15 essays were written on an optional basis.

The students in the alternative center are primarily older students and as a part of their service learning component they often undertake tasks of a volunteer nature. Their participation in the elder conference counted toward service learning as well as some work they did with the daycare next door which is place for young mothers.

Characteristics of a good parent

By Adriana Bear Shield
Todd County School District Alternative Center

A good parent is someone who you will always be proud to talk about with your friends at the lunch table. A good parent is someone who will love you no matter what type of music you like or who your friends are. A good parent will always take the time to try to understand the words that come out of your teenage mouth.

I have only one parent and seven brothers and sisters. I think my mother is a very good parent because she takes so much time to try to understand us all. She waits with us outside for our bus in the morning and is waiting for us after school when we get dropped off. No matter how hard her day was at work, she always seems to have a smile on her face. She always wants to hear how school went and if we like it. If we tell her we did not like it, she wants to know why we do not like it. She knows all of our friends and treats them like her own.

When I put something on, my mom tells me if it looks good or not. She does not try to sugar coat it and the way it see it, I am glad she tells me before I come to school looking funny. My mom is a good parent because she makes us exercise at least three times a day. She cooks the food that she knows we like but if it I not too healthy, she will add green beans or corn. Besides being a very fun mother, she also knows how to set the rules and make sure we follow them. Sometimes I think she has eyes in the back of her head.

My mother is a good parent because when I have to study for a test, she is my study partner. She makes me study until I get the whole test down. She is a good parent because when we need something, she somehow finds a way to get it. She talks to us all the time about our deceased grandmother just to make sure we remember us. She still gets us a basket filled with goodies on Easter even thought most of us are over the age of 18. Every birthday, she gets us a cake with our pictures on it.

My mother is a very good parent to me being that she is the only parent. She has a hard time, I know that, but she never gives up. It is not like her to give up on us. I am so proud to have her as my mother because she is a very good worker and a very good parent. She moved us out of Antelope into our own home. Every single one of my brothers and sisters, including me, had our own room. As soon as we walked into our new home, our rooms were already fixed up the way my mother knew we would like them. Everything was exactly the way we wanted it to be.

To make a long story short, to me, a good parent is my mother, Rebecca Bear Shield, because she loves us and knows each and every one of us very well. She is a very great parent and I love her so much.

Pine Ridge leads West Division at 4-3

Three game win streak pushes Thorpes to top

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - After a slow start to the 2007 baseball season, Pine Ridge has put together a three game win streak to move into first place of the West Division of Region 4 in the South Dakota High School Baseball Association. With 7-5 and 14-7 wins over Hot Springs and a 13-7 win over Lead-Deadwood, Pine Ridge moves their record to 4-3.

Teams making up the West Division include Hot Springs 4-4, Bennett County 1-6 and Lead-Deadwood 0-7. The East Division includes Winner-Colome 8-0, Platte /Geddes/Dakota Christian 5-2, South Central 5-3 and Chamberlain/ Kimball 3-5. There are 34 teams in the Class B while there are 14 teams in Class A.

Pine Ridge's roster includes Harley Cortier(10) pitcher, short stop, second base, Dave Michaud(12) catcher, third base, outfield, Louis Ramos(12) pitcher, short stop, Juan Ramos(10) third base, Andrew Backward(12) first base, Bluch Black Feather(10) second base, outfield, Rico Ramos(9) short stop, second base, Sky Young(12) outfield, Hobart Locke(10) second base, Galen Twiss(10) outfield. Darrin Merrival is the coach.

In the opening double header in Burke, Juan Ramos batted .778 with a home run while Harley Cortier batted .500 including two doubles, one a walk-off double in the bottom of the seventh for a 10-9 win over Lead-Deadwood. Bulldawg Michaud hit at a .600 clip in the first two games.

Pine Ridge is at Bennett County on May 3 (5:30pm game time), travels to Chamberlain/Kimball on May 4 (5pm game time) and has a game with Platte/Geddes/Dakota Christian to make up. Playoffs start May 12-15 with the championship game set for May 28.

PIERRE - South Dakota has some of the lowest electric rates in the nation, but state Public Utilities Chairman Dusty Johnson says the era of cheap energy may be coming to an end.

Johnson says current prices would not be so favorable if state officials had jumped on the electric deregulation bandwagon nearly a decade ago.

Sixteen states instituted deregulation, and consumers in those states wound up paying much higher rates for electricity than those who live in states that continued to regulate their power industries.

Residential electric rates in South Dakota averaged about eight cents per kilowatt hour last year. The national average was more than ten cents.

Johnson says electric rates everywhere may go up in the future.

Program delivers workers to job 100 miles away

ABERDEEN (AP) - Midstates Printing in Aberdeen found the temporary employees it needed by looking 100 miles away to the Crow Creek Reservation.

People from the reservation, near Fort Thompson, are driven by van to the Aberdeen business, work three days and are taken back to the reservation.

Norman Taylor, 26, is one of 30 people from Crow Creek employed in temporary positions at Midstates. He has worked there for two weeks.

``It's a good opportunity,'' he said. ``I hope it (the program) grows.''

Dave Burgard, general manager of Midstates Printing, said Midstates sometimes experiences a temporary labor shortage during certain times of the year. He said Roger Feickert, owner of Midstates Printing, came up with the idea as a way to add to Midstates' temporary labor pool.

Lisa Lengkeek, director of the Tribal Employment Rights Office on the Crow Creek Reservation, said the program benefits Midstates Printing and the people of Crow Creek.

Lakota Country Times/KILI Radio Indian Country All Stars

Azure, Parvin, Weston repeat as Krolikowski, Lunderman use state appearance to hit the top

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

For the third year in a row, Lakota Country Times and KILI Radio 90.1 FM of Porcupine have selected along with sportscasters, coaches and fans, the top girls and boys basketball athletics.
Next week will be the high school boys basketball All Stars.

MARTIN - After a strong off-season schedule, Pine Ridge opened the season by breezing through the Lakota Nation Invitational in December knocking off Todd County by 30 points for the championship, won tough road games at the Dakota Classic, the Northern State Classic and against Bennett County on the way to a number one ranking and an undefeated 20-0 regular season. Still a very young team, starting four sophomores and a freshman late in the season, Pine Ridge lost to Bennett County in the District 14A championship game and finished up 21-1 with a great future ahead of them. Bennett County went on to beat Winner in overtime for the regional championship and finish second to Vermillion in the Stat e A tourney.

Both Cheyenne Eagle Butte and Red Cloud represented Indian Country and the Lakota Nation tourney in this year's state tournament. The Lady Braves put together a solid season, winning District 12A and Region 6A titles and finishing seventh in the State A while Red Cloud turned their program around with first year head coach, Ted Standing Soldier Jr. who started two juniors and three sophomores and used a late season win streak for momentum to roll through District 15A and Custer and Region 8A and St. Thomas More to make it to the State A tourney for the first time in six years.

Brittany Azure

For the second year in a row, Cheyenne Eagle Butte's power forward Brittany Azure anchors the first team, the same way she anchored the Lady Braves march to the State A tourney this year.

The 5'11" senior averaged 14ppg and 7.8rpg and offered the necessary leadership on a team that included starting line-up of one sophomore and two freshman. Along with Jordyn Brown, Brittany was the "go to" person when a key stop was needed or a big rebound or much-needed points.

Sammie Parvin

Winner's Sammie Parvin, a 5'11" junior guard, returns to the first team this year after being moved to the point guard position. Sammie's points per game went down, she averaged 9.5ppg, 3.9 rebounds and 3.3 steals but her all around game helped to lead the Lady Warriors to a 13-7 season and to the Region 7A championship game, an overtime loss to Bennett County who eventually took second in state. Parvin will be back next year to lead a solid returning crew for Winner.

Lacey Weston

Lacey Weston, a 5'11" sophomore for Pine Ridge earns first team honors again after leading the Lady Thorpes in both scoring and rebounding this year. Last year and for the first half of the year, Weston teamed up with Keisha Brewer to dominate the post play; after Brewer went down with a knee injury in late January, Lacey had to carry the inside load herself - she stepped up and played solid helping to lead Pine Ridge to an undefeated regular season and the valuable experience gained over the last two years will only benefit the Lady Thorpes in the next two years as they set their sights on a state championship.

Keely Krolikowski

Averaging 20 plus points a game and helping to lead her team to the state championship game, Keely Krolikowski, a junior at Bennett County in Martin, earned first team honors this year after making the second team last year. Bennett County went through the regular season with only one loss, an 81-80 loss at the hands of Pine Ridge on a last second shot and bounced back to beat Pine Ridge in the District 14A championship game, survive an overtime win in the regions over Winner and lose to Vermillion in the State A championship game. Krolikowski provided key offensive firepower throughout the year, showed a strong maturity and poise in the crunch of close games and stepped up the defense all year long.

Marque Lunderman

The first team is rounded out with Marque Lunderman, a 5'8" sophomore guard/forward for Red Cloud. Lunderman started for Red Cloud as a freshman and used that experience and a summer of hard work to mature into a solid team leader that led the Lady Crusaders in scoring and steals and helped take a very young team to the State A tourney in Spearfish. Whether weaving her way through the lane or knocking down threes, Marque raised her game to a new level and will certainly be someone to watch over the next two years and beyond.

Those earning second team honors included:

Jondyn Brown/Cheyenne Eagle Butte, Ida Clarke/Red Cloud, Christian Janis/Pine Ridge, Kali Brave-Jenkins/St. Francis and Keisha Brewer/Pine Ridge. Brown is a senior, Brewer, Clarke and Brave-Jenkins are juniors and Janis is a freshman.

Third team honors go to Sophia Janis and Nichelle Red Owl of Pine Ridge, Jessica Keckler/Cheyenne Eagle Butte, Kelsey Brave Eagle/Little Wound and Shelby Hunger/Todd County. Brave Eagle is a senior, Red Owl is a junior while Janis, Hunger and Keckler are sophomores.

Honorable mention goes to Tia McCloskey/Todd County, Lisa Bear Robe and Shaina Clifford/Red Cloud, Carissa Brown Otter and Germaine Morrison/McLaughlin, Robin Webber and Saadia Tasso/Pine Ridge.

Outstanding newcomers included Lacy Leaf and Nadia Watt/Cheyenne Eagle Butte, Kristy Boltz/Red Cloud, Marcie Rodriguez/St. Francis, Kirsten Clifford and Tawni Shay Hunter/Little Wound.

Many thanks to the coaches, followers and media representatives who helped put the all star teams together.

Red Cloud coasts to West River golf crown

MARTIN - Red Cloud girls dominated the West River Conference golf meet coming in with a team total of 286, easily downing Bennett County's 355. Little Wound scored 438 and Pine Ridge did not have a full team.

Jacqui White scored a 93 on the Martin course, Bobbi White hit for 96 and Shelby Ross finished with a 97. Tiara Little ended up with a 110. Alyssa Whirlwind Horse led Little Wound with a 100 followed by Emily Charging Crow's 165 and Kaitlyn Brave Eagle's 173. Mi Casa now open for business

PINE RIDGE - The new Mi Casa eatery opened several weeks ago and is located at the former Altell location in Pine Ridge half block off Highway 18, opposite from St. Claire gas station. The eatery is owned and operated by Suzy and Perry Mesteth and includes a fair menu of burritos, tacos, tostados, nacos, taco salads and mexidogs with rice and beans. Mesteth delivers and is open from 10 am until evening and will be celebrating Cinco De Mayo on Saturday with a special menu. (L-R) Sherri Black Bear, Delmarie Brewer, Suzy Meseth and Jenny Mesteth. Bureau of Reclamation official to visit May 3

PINE RIDGE - The U.S. Bureau of Reclamation Commissioner, Robert Johnson, has scheduled a trip to the Pine Ridge area on Thursday, May 3. He is the first Commissioner of Reclamation to visit the reservation during construction of the Mni Wiconi Rural Water Project, and this is a very historical event for the Oglala Sioux Tribe. Johnson will be accompanied by various officials from the Bureau of Reclamation, including the Great Plains Regional Office and Dakotas Area Office.

John Steele, OST tribal president, had offered an invitation to the commissioner to visit the reservation during a trip to Washington, D.C., last month during appropriation meetings regarding the Mni Wiconi Rural Water Project.

Steele feels strongly it is because of his personal invitation that the visit was made a possibility and Johnson had obliged his request.

The following is a schedule of events for the visit:

At 11 a.m., the group will tour the Slim Buttes and Oglala Project area and will have lunch at the Sue Ann Big Crow's Boys and Girls Club. After lunch, there will be a meeting with the tribal council members and then with the project sponsors, Rosebud Sioux Tribe, Lower Brule, West River/Lyman Jones.

Please contact Mr. Paul Little, OSRWSS Liaison, at 455-2767 for further information.

Gov. Rounds and meth addict tell students to face facts about meth

By Chet Brokaw
Associated Press

PINE RIDGE - Gov. Mike Rounds urged students on Pine Ridge High School on Tuesday to stay off methamphetamine, a drug he said is ruining lives and filling South Dakota's prisons.

"We don't want to put people in jail. What we want to do is give you help so you don't end up in jail," Rounds said during a presentation to about 700 high school and middle school students.

Rounds visited a dozen schools around the state last year to discuss the dangers of meth, and he is visiting another four this week.

Much of Tuesday's presentation was made by Jeremy Bucholz of Pierre, who works as a drug counselor after doing two prison terms because he was using, making and selling meth.

Bucholz told the students how he started using drugs in his early teens. Students listened particularly closely when he described putting fertilizer, battery acid and nail polish in the meth he made and sold.

"I traded my childhood for drug use," Bucholz told the students. "I gave up everything, but you don't have to because now you know."

High school senior Cheryl Cedar Face said the presentation was effective because Rounds and Bucholz met students face to face.

"It's different to have someone who's been there talking to you rather than

OLC lists 6th Annual reservation wide science fair results

KYLE - The fair was held in Oglala Lakota College's Lakota Center for Science and Technology April 24 - April 27. Pre-registration was due on April 13 and there were 145 pre-registered projects. Of those, 121 projects were completed and participated in the fair. This year's fair was the biggest one yet. The projects were of a very high quality and the majority of them used the scientific method of problem solving. A great big thank you goes out to all the teachers who supported the fair and entered projects, said Misty Brave, coordinator for the fair.

The following schools participated in this year's fair: Pine Ridge Elementary and High School, Loneman, Little Wound Elementary and High School, Crazy Horse, Batesland, Rockyford, American Horse, OLL, Porcupine, Red Cloud Elementary and High School and two home school projects.

There were close to 300 students that were involved in the fair. All participants will receive different ribbons according to how they placed - Grand Prize Rosettes, Blue First Place, Red Second Place or White Third Place. The judges this year included Tate Win Means, Al Eastman, Biagio Arroba, Dr. Gerald Gerard, Dan Koopman, Larry Gauer, Alicia Mousseaux, Dieg Sandoval, and Andy Thompson. Their final figures determined the "Best of the "Best".

All students, except first and second grade, and their teachers will be honored at a luncheon on May 11 at the Lakota Center for Science and Technology.

The first and second grade classes will receive a pizza party in their respective classrooms.

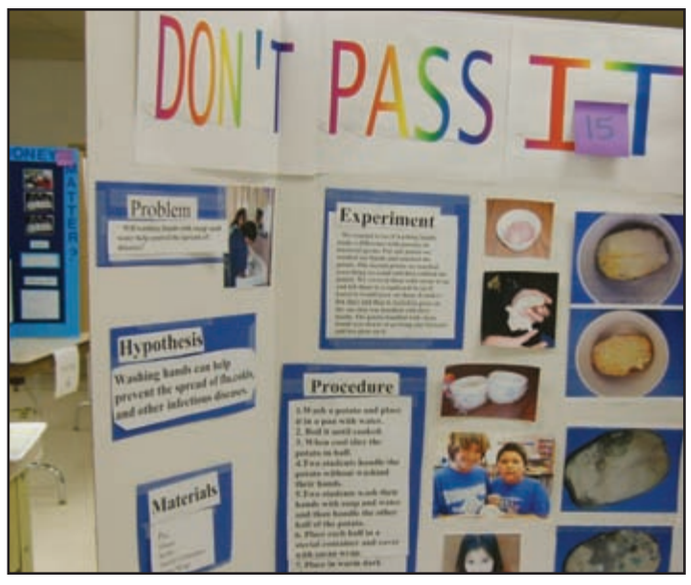
someone just showing you pictures," said Cedar Face, president of the student council. "I thought it was also cool Governor Rounds came down here on his tour... It's more personal."



Rounds said about 41 percent of the South Dakota women locked up after convictions in the past nine months had meth problems, while 22 percent of the new male convicts had meth problems. About three-quarters of the state's most serious crimes are committed by meth users, he said.

"We've got to stop that," he said.

The governor said he particularly wants to warn high school girls about the dangers of meth. He said 9 percent of the state's 10th graders have tried meth.

Girls are told meth can help them lose weight quickly, but it quickly addicts them and causes them to loose teeth and have scabby skin, he said. "Don't fall for the stories about meth."

The campaign, called Face Facts: Meth Makes You Ugly, targets high school and junior high students.

Left: "Don't pass it on," by two Crazy Horse School third grade students Danielle Randall, Samone Last Horse, Juan and Ian Dull Knife with teacher Cloretta Eisenbraun was one of the winners of Best of Best. Their experiment was, "We wanted to see if washing hands made a difference with passing on bacterial germs. For one potato we washed our hands and touched the potato. The second potato we touched everything we could and then rubbed the potato. We covered them with saran wrap and left them in a cupboard to see if bacteria would grow on them. It took a few days and then it started to grow on the one that was handled with dirty hands. The potato handled with clean hands was slower at growing any bacteria and less grew on it."

Right: Gretchen Lees, a fourth grade teacher, with students with their project are three of the "Best of the Best" fourth grade, "Some Like it Hot" with Kris Carlow.

Poor Bear honored for Battle of Little Big Horn service

MARTIN - Enos Poor Bear Jr. was honored by the Oglala Sioux Tribal council on Friday, April 27 for his 17 years of work as representative for the tribe at the Battle of Little Big Horn memorial site near Crow Agency in Montana. Poor Bear's work with the memorial site includes representing the tribe and promoting youth to be involved in the annual celebration on June 25. He said his work with the memorial site was initiated by the work of his father, the late Enos Poor Bear Sr.

The Battle of the Little Bighorn ane also known as Custer's Last Stand and to tribes as the Battle of the Greasy Grass was a battle between the Lakota-Northern Cheyenne combined force and the 7th Cavalry of the United States Army. It occurred June 25–June 26, 1876, near the Little Bighorn River and is considered a famous incident in the Indian Wars and was a remarkable victory for the Lakota and Northern Cheyenne.

Second official pleads guilty in school board embezzlement case

By Lauren Donovan and Jenny Michael Bismarck Tribune

BISMARCK - A second former member of the Twin Buttes school board has now admitted to being among those who allegedly stole more than $665,000 from the small Fort Berthold reservation elementary school over a three-year period ending in 2006.

Darcy Lone Bear, former vice president of the board, admitted he stole up to $25,000 in U.S. District Court in Bismarck two weeks ago.

Lone Bear is one of seven school personnel charged with conspiracy, embezzlement and fraud. They all initially pleaded not guilty after a federal indictment was handed down in November.

Former board president Melissa Starr changed her plea to guilty Thursday on one felony count. She admitted to stealing up to $330,000 in school funds.

U.S. District Judge Daniel Hovland ordered sentencing investigations for both Lone Bear and Starr. They will be sentenced sometime this summer under federal sentencing guidelines.

Under the guidelines, Lone Bear could face from zero to six months in jail, three years of supervised probation and up to 400 hours of community service. Hovland said anyone in the case who is convicted and given probation likely will be sentenced to community service as well.

"I think those who have taken from the Twin Buttes Elementary School need to give something back," he said.

Lone Bear said he did not see the problem initially in receiving stipends in double the amount he was supposed to get when he traveled to conferences, seminars and events as a school board member. He said school board members received a $1,000 stipend for attending such events.

"I didn't realize it was wrong to go and travel. It was board approved,"he said. "I thought it was OK, but I guess it was not."

Hovland questioned the necessity of school board members receiving stipends at all.

"If you don't think travel expenses are enough when you attend an out-of-state seminar, then don't serve on the school board," the judge said.

Bill Schmidt, a federal public defender appointed to represent Lone Bear, said during the hearing that some members of the board had been able to influence others. Schmidt declined to comment following the hearing because of unresolved issues in the case.

Starr promised to cooperate in a continuing federal investigation into fraudulent use of school funds and other areas.

Both Starr and Lone Bear are involved with Twin Buttes Custom Homes, Starr as a board member and Lone Bear as a construction manager.

Recently, the Three Affiliated Tribes returned more than $3 million in federal money slated for construction of a new school at Twin Buttes because the Bureau of Indian Affairs canceled the $8 million project.

Twin Buttes Custom Homes had been named as construction manager for the new school construction, and the BIA questioned Twin Buttes Custom Homes' qualifications and some early invoices for the project.

More charges are a possibility, though federal investigators say they can't comment about the details of the continuing investigation.

U.S. Attorney Clare Hochhalter said his office is talking with the remaining five defendants in the Twin Buttes conspiracy.

A trial scheduled that was scheduled for May 1 could be averted if the remaining defendants also enter into guilty plea agreements.

The seven were part of what the indictment described as a rampant conspiracy, covering each other's fake travel vouchers and salary advances to get access to the school's money, leaving the school unable to pay its bills. Starr also tapped into the school's checking accounts and credit card.

The other five who were charged are former board member Tammy Grady-Jacobs, $126,000; former principal Elaine Incognito, $67,000; former custodian Paul Fredericks, $63,000; former board member and Melissa Starr's brother, Hank Starr, $43,000; and former school finance manager Lillian Holen, $35,000.

The indictment details frequent occasions when the seven claimed travel to places they never went, ostensibly on school business. On other occasions, they allegedly claimed travel to places like Las Vegas, during the National Finals Rodeo, but never attended the training and workshops they claimed.

Gov. John Hoeven had suspended Melissa Starr, Hank Starr and Lone Bear from the school board, at the tribal council's request.

Hovland asked Lone Bear about his suspension from the school board and whether he had any plans to resign from the post.

"After today, I guess I probably will do that," Lone Bear said.

Nick Dressel

Dressel new RCHS principal

PINE RIDGE - Formative moments in life come when you least expect them.

For Nick Dressel, recently announced as the new principal of Red Cloud High School, it came on a long bus ride home after the Red Cloud football team that he then-coached had suffered another grueling loss. "We were having a bad season-and I mean, a 'bad' season-and I was feeling really down after the game," he recalls, when all of the sudden, and at the top of their lungs, "the boys started singing trail songs in Lakota."

For Nick, it was this simple moment that reinforced the reason he came to Red Cloud Indian School more than five years ago.

"These boys were able to rise above the pettiness of whether they had won or lost and simply enjoyed the time they were having together," Nick says. "It reminded me how special this place really is."

A graduate of Chadron State College, Nick earned a bachelor of science degree in education in 2002, and a master's degree in educational administration in 2005. In addition, he received his administration certification by the State of South Dakota , endorsed as a Secondary School Principal. At Red Cloud, Nick has served the school in a number of capacities: head football coach, high school dean of students and a teacher in US history, government and economics.

Now, he tackles the position of principal of the high school.

"I am really honored to take this next step in my professional life, but more so, to continue working with the incredible students and faculty on the reservation," he says. "This is the only school of its kind in the country, and I hope to continue to carry on and grow the rich traditions of the school."

When Nick assumes the position on August 6, he will work to place more focus on the service component of the school, as it is "integral to their formation as citizens of the world." In the future, he envisions curriculum revisions as well.

Robert Brave Heart, superintendent, is thrilled that Nick will be joining the administrative team in a new capacity. "I am confident that he will bring competence, passion and continuity to the Red Cloud High School community."

ASK ANNA

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I am a mother of three kids. This year I'm trying to get my G.E.D. and really wondering if I'll pass.

I'm really anxious to go college classes. Also there are all these girls who are always trying to fight me over rumors.

They're from the same district I'm from. Is it because they have nothing better to do with their lives? I am really looking forward to my G.E.D that's the only step towards my career.

Just Curious?

Dear Just Curious:

Yes, you will pass your GED test. Good for you. You will love college classes and the atmosphere of serious students headed towards a better life. The "stupid" girls trying to fight you are frustrated young women without any perspective of what being a real woman is about.

They are products of disruptive environments and usually have a focus of just partying (substance abuse) and "hooking" up and are not participating in any kind of self-improvement or self-realization.

A Spirit friend of mine told me that people's experience and understanding is just as big as their world. In this case, these young women have small worlds and small experience. They are well on their way to unproductive adulthood which is a direct road to either prison or worse.

The sad part is that unless they find healing, they will produce the next generation of destructive adults.

I remember years ago watching "futuristic" movies that showed a future earth citizenship of deprivation, despair, and really rough street lives. These young women are part of that future.

We can only pray that they finally find a better way to live. In the meantime, continue to avoid them and ignore them. I'll bet you that most of their mothers are still involved in drinking and brawling. As go the adults, so go the children. They have grown up in such chaos and confusion that they don't have a clear picture of their own responsibility to themselves, their people and to Unci Maka. Pray for them.

Dear Anna:

My mom has been diagnosed with cervical cancer and I want to know how she is going to be. Is she going to get well?

I also want to know if my boyfriend really loves me. He says he does.

Wants to know

Dear Wants to know:

Your mom will be okay. I see her getting medical treatment as well as going to a healing ceremony. She will recover nicely.

This gives me a chance to warn everyone about human papaloma virus (HPV). There are many strains and the one that is most prevalent on the Pine Ridge Reservation is not the one that there is a vaccine for. It is causal in cervical cancer, and is transmitted sexually. Another reason for safe sex.

Your boyfriend thinks he really loves you. He is only fifteen years old; and love is love...but consider this: both he and you are growing and changing daily.

The person that suits you today probably will not be the one that suits you in 10 or 20 years. Take your time with life; enjoy your youth, and please be careful.

Dear Anna:

My car broke down and I don't have a job right now but need a car to go and look for work. Is there anyway that you can give me a car?

Thought I'd ask

Dear Thought I'd ask:

Well, it doesn't hurt to ask but the answer right now is no. I just barely have a car myself. I drive a rez rocket.

What I see is that you have a friend that works in Martin. She can give you a ride there everyday. I see you getting a job there in a program that helps youth.

After six months of employment I see you getting a car. In the meantime, if I hit the lottery I will buy you a car. Pray for me. (for those critical readers who don't understand this is a joke).

Dear Anna:

I have a bad past that I don't like to talk about. I have done real good the last two years. I am now sober and I work everyday. I pay my bills and I am learning to be a good parent.

The problem is that my family still doesn't trust me. They keep bringing up my past in front of people. This hurts me. What can I do besides what I am doing to prove that I am doing a good job and being a good person?

Tired of hearing about it.

Dear Tired:

Families often have long memories. I suggest that you mail a copy of this column to your family so they will see what they are doing in a different light.

I want them to remember that youth is not always wise...but when someone changes their life they deserve respect for that choice and compassion, not criticism for their past.

Good Luck and God Bless you. You are a shining example of success in my eyes and the eyes of others. Keep on Trucking!

Dear Anna:

My grandpa just passed away a little while ago and I am so mad at my family that I can't stand it. My grandpa was a sweet man and he had a dog that followed him everywhere.

His dog was mostly outside, but he let him inside when the weather was bad or when he whined at the door.

My family is busy fighting over the things in my grandpa's house. Things disappear over night and even his pictures of my grandma are gone. Nobody seems to be fighting over the dog though; they have just let him sit.

I go over and feed him everyday but my mom won't let him come over here.

Why is my family so mean and crazy? Why do they fight over watches, pictures, old furniture and dishes? Why doesn't anyone care about what he cared about - his dog?

What can I do. I am only thirteen and want to take the dog and run away. I think everyone is greedy and nuts.

Gonna Run

Dear Gonna Run:

Don't run. I see an uncle of yours moving into the house. He doesn't live near here yet, but I think that you know about him. Keep feeding the dog. Take him for walks too.

Your uncle will be glad for the friendship of the dog and he misses his father. He will be good to the dog and he won't miss the furniture or the dishes as he will be thankful for the roof over his head.

Your family is not very different from many families.

The problem we call greed is sometimes not that but a fear of not having enough: not enough memories of your grandpa; not enough pictures; not enough of the things they need in life and not enough control.

Eventually things will settle down. The things that have been taken will show up in various relatives homes.

I would ask the question who is in charge of the estate but I see the answer is everybody and nobody in particular as he did not have an executor.

He didn't have much but he did have your love - and that is what he took with him and what he left to you. Don't worry about the stuff - it didn't mean very much to him so it shouldn't mean that much to you.

What mattered to him was you and the dog. You are okay and the dog will be fine too - thanks to the kindness of an uncle who has had a hard life.

"Core Four Planning Course"

In this six week seminar you will learn how to transform your ideas and goals into a successful business! Gain insight on how to successfully grow an existing business! CORE FOUR Business Planning course provides essential business planning knowledge for anyone with an existing business, a business idea, or simply the desire to become an entrepreneur.

Dubbed "The Entrepreneur's Bible" by many of its advocates, CORE FOUR Business Planning Course is an indispensable learning tool for both novice and experience entrepreneurs. The four "core" elements of business planning outlines in the manual include learning how to identify and target your market, understanding how to operate your business under the proper standards and legal requirements, learning how to project your business' cash flow, and planning for business success.

For more information about the curriculum go to www.corefouronline.com or contact Lakota Funds at (605) 455-2500 to register.

Classes will begin Tuesday, May 15 at Pejuta Haka college center in Kyle, SD at 5 p.m.

Happy Birthday Son!
You left us to soon, only to be remembered by the precious memories that you have given us, which can only be cherished by all the ones who love you so much. Seems like only yesterday an everyday we remember you talking, laughing and joking. We can only reach out and grab the air of remembrance of where you once stood. Every time someone remembers you we could only hold back the tears of memories. The sadness in our hearts will never heal only in time will it ease the pain. We always hug our hearts because that's where we hold you so near. We know you are with the creator and being our guardian angel. So have a Happy Birthday with peace and happiness and know that we think of you everyday. We love you Son today, everyday, until we meet again.
Always missing you and loving you!

Headstart honors 183 graduates Friday

Review team impressed by OLC's progress

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PIYA WICONI - "For the first time ever, all of the Headstart graduates will be honored during one ceremony here at Piya Wiconi, at the Three Mile Creek pow wow grounds," said Michelle Yankton, Headstart director, "when all of the individual center graduations were on the same day out in the districts last year, I received numerous calls about putting them on different days so family and friends could attend more than one ceremony."

On Friday, May 11, Oglala Lakota College will honor 183 Headstart graduates from 26 headstart centers across Pine Ridge Reservation. The honoring ceremonies get underway at 10:30 a.m. with Tom Short Bull, OLC president addressing the graduates, families and friends and Brian Charging Cloud doing the invocation. It will be up to each center and the parent committees to plan anything additional like a cookout, a reception or other activities in their respective centers and communities, added Yankton.

This is the second year that Oglala Lakota College has had the Headstart contract and currently operates 10 headstart buildings across the reservation with 26 classrooms and five early headstart centers. After a long wait with many construction delays, the two Porcupine headstarts and their early headstart moved into their new building in Porcupine in October and so far it is going well, according to headstart staff. Enrollment this year is 522 students, 75 who are in early headstart; headstart centers across the reservation include Oglala (2), Pine Ridge (9), Wakpamni, Allen, Martin (2), Wanblee (2), Kyle (2), Porcupine (2), Wound Knee (2), Manderson (2) and Red Shirt. There are early headstart centers are located in Oglala, Porcupine, Kyle, Pine Ridge and Manderson.

A seven member national review team visited the OLC headstart operation during the week of April 16-20. The team included a federal team leader out of Washington D.C. as well as headstart representatives from different regions around the country.

KYLE - Last week, Cangleska welcomed public to come and see the new women's shelter in Kyle.

More than 350 people attended the open house, ate a grand meal of buffalo and cake and stayed for the ceremony that highlighted past and present achievers in the field of taking of women and children.

The new shelter is part of a newly constructed $1.35 million 9-acre complex which includes a $1.25 million shelter, the Tokahe Wicayapi Visitation Center and a new maintenance building.

The new 7,800-square-foot shelter will comfortably house up to 36 women and children as well as office and meeting space for the administrative and counseling services of the organization.

Well over more than 350 people attended the open house, ate and

Dr. Richard Bordeaux retires after 32 years in Indian education

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

HE DOG - The staff and students of He Dog School and their small community on the Rosebud reservation came together and honored Todd County School District, Superintendent Dr. Richard Bordeaux, in traditional Lakota style last Friday evening, May 5. An honoring wacipi and the evening session began with a traditional meal of buffalo stew, fry bread, and wojapi.

Dr. Bordeaux has led the TCSD for 16 years and has been involved in Indian education for 32 years. The TCSD consists of 12 educational centers and 2,100 students and 500 staff members. He was named the "Outstanding Indian Educator of the Year" in 1992 by the South Dakota Indian Education Association.

Sicangu chief, John Spotted Tail and RST council representative, Russell Eagle Bear escorted Todd County School District superintendent, Dr. Richard Bordeaux, into the arena last Friday evening as the staff, students and community of He Dog School on the Rosebud Sioux reservation honored their leader for his years of service to the Sicangu oyate.

In 2000, Bordeaux was elected the president of the National Indian Impact school Association consisting of 600 public schools and the National Association of Federal Impact Schools consisting of 1,300 schools located throughout the country.

Dr. Bordeaux also served as a board member of the South Dakota Parent Connection and is currently a member of the Impact Schools of South Dakota, a member of the SGU Board of Regents and the Rosebud Economic Development Corporation.

Bordeaux plans to build a house and do some consulting to area schools ble in the movement to stop domestic violence.

She told the audience scientific evidence isn't needed to support the need, because if you are true Lakota, you know what we are doing to each other isn't right.

She spoke highly of Bernice Swallow, who was honored for leading the way in women's rights.

"Back in 1987, Bernice was our guide, when we organized and begin to talk about the conditions of the women rights on Pine Ridge."

In 1989, the Oglala Sioux Tribe exercised it's sovereignty when it passed the first mandatory arrest in all of Indian country to hold batter's accountable for their bad behavior, she said.

That took the burden of responsibility away from the victim to the law enforcement.

"Way back 20 years ago, the tribe was the first one and it continues to take the lead and sometimes we don't want to hear this stuff and the reason why it's hard to hear, because intuitively deep down inside our stomach we know that is the not way it is suppose to be," she said.

Fire Thunder spoke of the commitment of Marlin Mousseau and Karen Artichoker, who were lead in developing the 1996 Project Medicine Wheel, which eventually became Cangleska, Inc.

"Today we are not only celebrating the beautiful building but the tenth anniversary of Cangleska and Sacred Circle in Rapid City. Sacred Circle has provided training to hundreds of people across the nation in advocacy for women and children," Fire Thunder said.

Others that were honored were Pat Lee, who was chief judge at the time, the domestic violence code was implement.

The code provides mandatory arrest on the reservation involving domestic violence. Lee said it was a law that addresses the problem and leads to healing.

The shelter still needs a few housekeeping items in place before families can use the building.

in South Dakota as his many years of service to the Lakota people has enabled him to gain some critical skills in administration and meeting the needs of the No Child Left Behind legislation.

A cold drizzle descended upon the small community of He Dog, however, it did not dampen the spirits of an almost packed house who enjoyed an excellent meal and were able to chat a bit and meet new people.

As in many gatherings these days, there are not a whole of elders who frequent such celebrations anymore and the ones that did could be counted on one hand.

He Dog Principal, Deb Boyd and her staff and the wacipi committee did a very commendable job in getting the word out on KINI and sending out personal invitations. Ned Metcalf of Two Strike community on the Rosebud made an announcement in Lakota of the honoring on KINI FM radio. The wacipi committee included Ira High Pipe, June Smith, Rose Elk Looks Back, Mrs. Schmidt, and Mary Guerue. Royce Yellow Hawk was the arena director and the eyapaha was Pat Bad Hand of Two Strike community who kept things moving by occasionally pestering Ira.

Dr. Richard Bordeaux was present as was many of his extended family and his school family. The Todd County School Board was represented by Chairman Marlon Leneaugh who has been on the school board for 18 years, and members Troy Heinert and Charlie Moe.

Sicangu medicine man Roy Stone of Parmelee gave the invocation while the Red Leaf singers as the host drum sang the Lakota flag song. The other drums groups included Kiyukanpi, Eagle Creek, Dreamcatcher drum from SFIS, the He Dog school drum group, the Isnala Najin drum and Thunder River. Pat Bad Hand noted that the Dreamcatcher drum was able to travel to the wacipi because of perfect attendance.

RST President Bordeaux read an Executive Proclamation proclaiming May 5 as "Dr. Richard Bordeaux Day" on the Rosebud reservation for his 16 years of leadership, while Deb Boyd and her staff at He Dog presented Dr. Bordeaux with a beautiful star quilt with Todd County School colors of blue and gold. Dr. Bordeaux was also given a sacred eagle feather in a brief ceremony conducted by leksi Roy Stone and RST council representative, Russell Eagle Bear.

The family of World War II veteran and traditional dancer, Bill Little Thunder of Upper Cut Meat community honored their late father and grandfather with a reading by RST President Bordeaux of the many awards and honors which he had received including proclamations from the Rosebud Sioux Tribe and the state of South Dakota. He had also received a high school diploma by virtue of being a World War II veteran from St. Francis Indian School.

A couple of beautiful decorated cakes were shown around the arena by Calvin Waln and one of them had Little Thunder's Lakota name, Sungmanitu Cikala on it.

"We won't get the evaluation report for 45 days but they were very impressed with the progress that we have made in the short time that we have had the contract," said Yankton, "those comments were greatly appreciated considering the challenges that we have overcome during the last two years, dealing with recruiting a new staff, problems with facilities and a bus fleet that needed updating. We have requested additional staff in our new grant including an educational coordinator and a family advocate."

After graduation ceremonies on Friday, the headstart centers will stay open until May 18; the early headstart centers will continue to operate until June 15. According to Yankton, there will be summer courses offered for headstart staff so they may continue their education upgrades.

Prairie Wind Casino sets grand opening for June 14-16

Phil Hogen keynotes, Tanya Tucker/Restless Heart entertain

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

OGLALA - The long awaited grand opening of the new Prairie Wind Casino has been set for Thursday, Friday and Saturday, June 14-16 on the western edge of Pine Ridge Reservation. Funded through a $20 million loan from the Shakopee Mdewankanton Sioux Community in Minnesota.

The new casino has actually been operating for the last month while the hotel has been held up by an additional water line with a reservoir and two booster stations.

"We are looking forward to welcoming everyone to the new casino and hotel during those three days," said casino manager Mike Graham, "the water is basically complete now, we still need to receive a certificate of substantial completion by the tribe, we need to install phones in every room and complete a contract with Lodgenet for television services for not only the hotel but the casino and restaurant as well."

Phil Hogen, chairman of the national Indian Gaming Commission and tribal member, will be the keynote speaker for the formal opening ceremonies set for Friday, June 15 at 11 a.m. while Frank Means, past chairman of the economic and business development committee of the tribal council and current Oglala Sioux Rural Water director will be the master of ceremonies.

The grand opening plans call for Restless Heart to play for 90 minutes Thursday evening at 7 p.m. followed by a 90 minute set with Tanya Tucker at 9 p.m. Following the opening ceremonies on Friday, a meal will be provided starting at 12:30 p.m. and at 7 p.m. Pow wow Comedy Jam are set to perform followed by more comedy entertainment. Cash prizes will be given out throughout the day with $5,000 given out at midnight. Saturday more cash prizes will be given out with $10,000 set to be given out at midnight. Sunday the casino will have a special Father's Day celebration.

The tribal council discussed the certificate of substantial completion during the April meeting and tabled any action until both Graham and Mario Gonzalez would be in attendance; discussion focused on the liability of the construction company and warranty provided and length of warranty. Additional discussion included separating the casino from the hotel, no action was taken on that as well. According to Graham, the council has set up a special meeting at the casino on Friday to deal with outstanding casino issues.

The Prairie Winds Casino motel will be open for business at the time of the grand opening.

There still has been no progress in the discussions on revising the compact with the state for additional gaming machines so the tribe and casino have looked at bids for Class II machines.

"There are at least two other casinos in the state, Royal River and Dakota Sioux who have both Class III and Class II machines," said Graham, "we currently have three bids here now and are waiting for a fourth. We are looking at trying 25 machines from four different vendors for a 90 day trial period and those that worked we would keep, those that did not we would remove; the plan calls for the Class II machines to be distributed around the casino not set in just one place."

Graham hopes to have everything worked out on the Class II machines by the grand opening but that may be a bit optimistic. The casino was originally built with the idea that it would have 500 Class III machines.

Nellie Bald Eagle is the new hotel manager with Wilson "Buzzy" Two Lance hired as the assistant hotel manager. According to Graham, they are three weeks into a five week training by a special consultant in hotel management - the consultant trained the hotel manager at Dakota Sioux Casino at Sisseton Wahpeton and they are still there after a year of work..

The old casino employed 200 workers, most of them members of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, with the opening of the new casino and hotel, there will be somewhere between 250 and 300 employees.

SGU classes and Sicangu elders discuss RST secretarial amendments

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

> 'It's scary that only 1,300 registered for the election…'
> Duane Hollow Horn Bear

MISSION - A diverse gathering of Sinte Gleska University Lakota studies and business students converged on the multipurpose building to discuss the proposed amendments to the Rosebud Sioux Tribal secretarial election on May 3. Several elders from the Lakota Women for Change were present as were others from the tribal membership.

It was a great opportunity for students and Sicangu elders to interface and openly discuss the ramifications of the 27 proposed amendments which had been pared down from the original 182 by the RST secretarial election task force. RST tribal members will vote on the proposed amendments in July.

Lakota Women for Change members present included, Vi Burnette, Dorothy Marshall and Lois Antoine. Later, during the proceedings former RST council representative, Christine Dunham, also joined the event.

SGU Lakota Studies instructor, Duane Hollow Horn Bear, introduced the ground rules and purpose of the gathering as he noted, "Your opinions and feelings. What strengths and weaknesses are in the amendments? Do they threaten the people in any way? The amendments may pass and kick in no matter who is in office. Your children and grandchildren will have to live with this."

Leksi Albert White Hat, also of the SGU Lakota Studies department began the day's events with a Lakota song and words of encouragement. He said, "To change a nation, it takes several generations. In the 1930's our people began to change. The first amendments began to come in the 1960's. What we have here will have a major impact. It used to be that we shook hands, but when it comes to the government we like to have documents."

SGU Business Department Chair, Nora Antoine-Bordeaux also prefaced the meeting with her thoughts about the exercise on this day as her students also contributed to the discussion. She said, "This is a good opportunity for our students to learn about the amendments. We need to re-invigorate our skills on how to conduct meetings in a public manner. How many of us go to community meetings?"

Hollow Horn Bear, also a member of the RST secretarial election task force introduced a very important aspect of the secretarial election amendments. He said, "Our enrollment is 33,000 and how many of us live here, 25,000 to 30,000. It is scary that only 1,300 people registered. The majority does not live here, yet they send in their absentee ballots. They want to vote for the laws we have to live under. We need to get that information out to the public."

The class room was probably too small to adequately accommodate the packed room, however, the intimate setting allowed everyone to hear others and to respond if they so desired.

The objective was to discuss the majority of the amendments; however, the discussion got bogged down as respondents tended to interject their personal experiences and opinions. Only about 8 amendments were discussed as the three hours passed by all too quickly as leksi Albert did a very good job of keeping the focus on the amendment wording and their implications for anticipated change.

Amendment 1 calls for a name change to the Sicangu Nation and most present thought that it would promote pride and cohesion as the Rosebud Sioux are leaders in Indian Country.

Amendement 2 calls for inclusion of the name change of Sicangu Nation into the preamble of the RST constitution. Lakota Studies student, Dawn, said, "We should go house to house to get the word out" while White Hat said, "We have the swing vote in elections."

Amendment 3 says, "All persons who can provide three (3) Generations of Lineal Descent born after April 01, 1935 to a member of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe, regardless of the residence of the parent." If tribal members vote no on this ballot question it will remain the same.

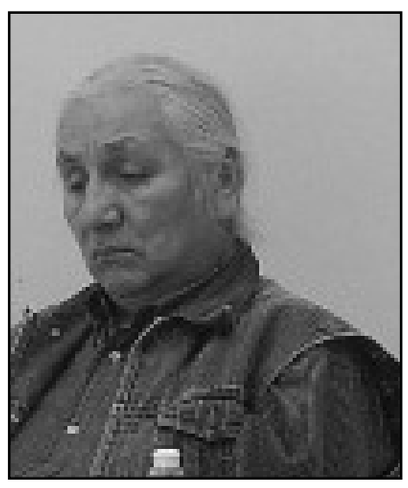
This amendment is one that will likely generate a lot of emotional debate as some tribal members have married outside of the tribe and their desire is to enroll their descendents.

One unidentified student pointed out that a ten year residency requirement should be added as the thought of third and forth generation urban Indians who may have relocated years ago could determine the future of the Sicangu Nation. Presumably, someone who never grew up on the Rosebud reservation could come home and gain office despite not being a stakeholder in the daily affairs of the tribe.

There was a sentiment that opening up enrollment through lineal descent might cause future Rosebud Sioux children to have to compete for educational and health care assistance. However, attorney Vi Burnette of the Lakota Women for Change said that the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Indian Health Service are the ones who will continue to set forth their criteria as to who qualifies for services and at what degree of blood.

Article 5 says, "All council members and the president and vice-president shall be of at least ¼ degree of Indian blood." One student said, "Indian blood. What does that mean? Another tribe could come in here and serve on the tribal council."

Albert White Hat occasionally interjected his opinion on the ensuing discussion and given his experience and wisdom his opinions were closely scrutinized.



He said, "The amendments are forcing us to get busy. We are really lax."

Some of the issues that appear to be a point of contention for some is that many of the amendments are poorly written, while others could have been combined into a single amendment.

Also, the secretarial election task force and the tribal council has to remain neutral and cannot advocate for or against the amendments and that notion is leaving some tribal members frustrated.

Some community education needs to occur so that tribal members know what they are voting for, while some resources needs to target appropriate advertising so that the community can conduct similar gatherings to discuss the amendments as time is running out.

House passes compensation bill

WASHINGTON (AP) The House passed legislation Monday that would provide compensation to the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe for land lost to the Oahe dam and reservoir north of Pierre, S.D.

The bill, introduced by Rep. Stephanie Herseth-Sandlin, D-S.D., seeks to compensate the tribe for approximately 100,000 acres on the reservation that was flooded during the construction of the dam more than 50 years ago.

There have been previous efforts to compensate the tribe, but lawmakers have said they were not adequate.

``Members of the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe have waited long enough to receive fair compensation for the unfairness that occurred decades ago,'' Herseth Sandlin said.

The Senate passed a similar bill in the last Congress.

Words from the 'trenches'

Shannon County annual banquet outstanding

Connie Smith-Blanco

I don't get out much but when I do I'm always amazed at the excitement that can be created here on the rez when people put their minds to it. Amanda and I went to the Shannon County Reservation student recognition banquet the other night and we're still raving about it (notice the new picture above)

We have so much student talent, potential and initiative right here on the rez, that can go unnoticed until a yearly wingding like this comes along. This was the night to shine for those students across the rez that have shown us grownups the true meaning of spirit, honor and perseverance.

I applaud the Shannon County School system for providing this outstanding opportunity for it's students. Families and students were admitted with special invitations and everyone attending was awarded with a great prime rib dinner complete with fixins. There was music to lighten the mood and the excitement from the nominated student candidates was as electric as lightning.

These students looked and felt special as they gathered their awards on stage and posed politely for pictures. Every candidate took home something of honor.

The programs contained student pictures, biographies and the history of the recognition banquet and how the student selection process takes place.

Reading and listening to each student's hopes and dreams for the future was illuminating. There were plans for college, graduate school, and professional careers. Students wanted to be doctors, lawyers, scientists and journalists. These students will be our leaders for tomorrow and this was their night. Behind these young leaders are their parents or a role model they are following.

The entertainment of Williams and Ree rocked the house with music and laughter. This duo picked on everyone and every color and we all laughed at and with them. I don't have enough money in my purse to buy tickets to a shindig like this in the big city but I felt like royalty sitting in that party decorated reservation auditorium. The Academy awards has nothing on this event.

It made me regret the invitations to this banquet that I've had to pass up in the last five years since I moved back to my home state. I took a lot of things away from this special night at the Shannon County Reservation student recognition banquet.

The most important thing I took home was that student glow of pride and achievement and hope for this next generation of leaders and followers. I'm definitely a follower here in the trenches.

Notes From Indian Country

'Today is a good day to die'

By Tim Giago

(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

If one takes the time to study the prophecies and the medicine of the Hopi, Lakota and other Indian nations, I believe they would be startled to find that so many of these predictions and cures are true.

The Mayan calendar ends on December 21, 2012. The planets and stars will be in a certain alignment on that day and there are those who predict that this day will be the "end of days."

The Indian people knew the universe. They moved about in their world to the movement of the stars and planets.

The so-called oral histories of many of the Indian tribes are often based on actual events even those deemed as myths.

The Lakota people (called Sioux by the white man) had a rich history of storytelling.

Each tribe had an "eyapaha" or what would be known today as a "town crier."

The eyapaha stood in the center of the village and told news of the day, often in verse and song.

The dance that has become so commercialized at the national pow wows was more often than not, the telling of a story.

The dancer might be a sand crane or a bear and through the dance the story of that animal was told.

In my mind there is nothing more graceful than the dance of the Lakota women.

Their fluid motions are like the interpretations of a poem.

And when they enter the dance arena their movements are like the rolling waves of a mighty lake.

And to see the warriors dancing in perfect unison as they lead the "grand entry" has always caused my heart to jump.

The Lakota move to the beat of the drums because they believe the beat is timed to the beat of their hearts.

The drum is the heartbeat of the Nation.

When I was a boy living at Kyle on the Pine Ridge Reservation many years ago the United States government, in its infinite wisdom, forbid many of the religious ceremonies of the Lakota, including the one of restoration and sacrifice, the Sacred Sun Dance. Like all people that have had their ceremonies stopped, the Lakota holy men and women took it under ground. My great grandmother was named Winyan Wakan, which translates to Holy Woman.

She was a holy woman that lived in the Pejuta Haka portion of the reservation before it was a reservation. Pejuta Haka translates to "medicine root."

The Lakota people did not know the diseases of small pox, typhoid and measles that would later decimate their populations.

The medicine roots and herbs gathered and used by my great grandmother and other winyan and wicasa wakan (holy women and men) were the foundation of the healing medicines that had been used for thousands of years to treat the illnesses then known to the Lakota.

When the new diseases brought to America by the invaders struck, there was not enough time for the medicine men and women to find the herbs and roots to cure these sudden diseases.

The rapidity of their advance was devastating. More than one half of the known Indian population in the Western Hemisphere succumbed to these new diseases.

I often have to chuckle whenever I see Hollywood's interpretation of an Indian medicine man (they always make the healer a man) because the portrayal often mocks the Indian people as ignorant savages using chimes, rattles and eagle feathers as cures.

The truth is that many of the herbs and roots used in Indian medicine have been refined and are now used in modern medicine.

If there was anything different from the practices of the ancient medicine men and women to that of a modern physician it was that the Indian often prayed aloud during the treatment and called upon Wakan Tanka (Great Spirit) to help in curing the patient. The Indian medicine men and women always tried to cure the mind as well as the body.

I remember that as a small boy I was stricken with pneumonia, a disease that was often fatal before the invention of antibiotics, and at night I would awaken to the soft glow of the kerosene lamp and listen to my grandmother singing softly in Lakota as she encouraged me to drink from the cup of herbs she had brewed.

Needless to say I survived.

Tasunka Witko, Crazy Horse, was a holy man of the Lakota.

He often rode into battle unafraid of the bullets whizzing past his horse. His words, "Today is a good day to die" are immortalized amongst the Lakota.

His words epitomized the philosophy of the Indian people. Our lives are a circle just as the stars; the moon and the sun are circles. We are born, we live and we die. There were no greater prophets than Crazy Horse and the holy men and women of the many tribes of what is now America.

Finding My Voice

What is Indian love?

Dana Lone Hill

What is Indian Love…hickeys and bingo?

Passion…whether it be good or bad? Shattered windows and broken hearts? Babies and promises? We all heard the jokes. We all told the jokes.

"Look at that couple, hickeys and shiners…that's love."

Or "You know that's love, somebody cared enough to break their windows."

And "Check them out, I remember when they met at the casino, she hit a jackpot that night."

BLAH, BLAH, BLAH.

Modern day jokes get in the way of what Indian love really was, and still is.

So let me start this by saying, I got married last Friday.

I married the man I lost touch with a long time ago.

So nobody knows we HAVE a history together…a history that is as complex as it is wonderful.

I wrote him off a long time ago and I figured I was doomed to a life of not ever having what I had with him. Then, we found each other again.

So, not only did I want to update my life. I also wanted to touch down on what I think is Indian Love.

There are certain people that joke about what Indian Love is and you people know who you are. Some of you, if not many of you are related to me. And it is funny, because I can fire back to every detail of Indian Love you think is funny.

Women were not to be heard they just stood by silently and did as told.

Um. Hello the Indian woman is still as powerful in any family today as she was back then, test me, and I will give you the names of many in this day and age.

The Indian women did all the work, all the men had to do was get the buffalo and the woman did the rest of the work. Ha ha, you think it is funny an Indian woman had that role?

See what I mean about an Indian woman being strong?

Especially, in her relationship with her man, her children, and the rest of the family, she was the core of that family back then, as much as she is today.

We all joke and laugh and poke fun, and I used to poke fun more than anyone. Sorry if I offended some of you. You know who you are. I also thank you for accepting my decision to marry my first love, and you know who you are.

He married into my family of not only me, some cats, and a stray dog but the most important of all, he married into a life of four children who will always need the guidance and role model of someone who is willing to step up and marry into that. He entered into my family without a doubt. That is a true Lakota man. That is Indian love.

The role of being an Indian woman is taking care of what is hers,whether that be herself, her children or her man (and her cats!). And YES to my bros, I do scratch his back when it itches, but that's love, in any world.

This is just my humble opinion, but Indian love is so complex that what it boils down to is taking care of the one you love. And what is theirs.

Dana Lone Hill is a 34-year old mother of 4, who recently moved back to the reservation, after an eternity on the housing waiting list. Although currently self-employed, she plans on continuing her education at the Oglala Lakota College.

Be true to your school

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

Commencement time is such an exciting time for those who have completed their course of study whether it is Headstart, high school or college. My son, Beaux, will be graduating from the eighth grade this month and I am sure it will be an emotional moment for me.

Speaking of Beaux, I am feeling a bit of controlled high anxiety as he went on a pre-end of the year trip to San Francisco with some folks who were his sitters when he was an infant and toddler.

I have spoken to him several times and have been supportive of his jaunt to the city by the bay.

I know that some day he will go out into that big old world beyond our Rosebud borders and I am certain he will find the opportunities that were meant to challenge him.

Here I go again, but I was eighteen when I headed to the military and never once looked back and the rest is history as they say.

Time flies as I sit here listen to "Groovin" by the Young Rascals and wonder how I might have done things differently: but, as Hillary Clinton says, "In life there are no do-overs" or something to that affect.

I am a great advocate of exposing Lakota youngsters to the great big world out there and so I felt some pressure to let Beaux go on the trip lest I appear to be a hypocrite.

He is such a great kid that he has made being a parent an experience that I almost missed.

I enjoyed the senior honoring wacipi held at the Ben Riefel auditorium over the weekend and the chance to speak on the evening agenda. But I missed the chance to listen to Dorothy Fire Cloud of the National Park Service during the afternoon session.

It has been awhile since I attended the Todd County High School wacipi and it was fun to see the youngsters compete with such energy and pride.

I have faith that the Lakota arts and dance are going to survive just fine as some of the youngsters were pretty young, but were worthy competitors with some rather fine outfits.

I dropped in on Vickie Sherman the principal of TCHS this morning and she was quite helpful with my request. I have to admire the fact that she signed on for another year despite a couple of lockdowns and bomb threats this year.

She noted that she is working to create a certain cohesion among the staff, teachers, students and presumably the community in order to give her work continuity and time to work.

Past years have seen a turnover in leadership at her level and Vickie would like to have more time to create positive change.

Yes, commencement time is an event that we need to participate in if we can as it signals a closure to that period in our lives as we go forth to meet new challenges.

I dropped the ball on that advice big time as I didn't return to Cambridge, Mash. for my commencement and I have regretted it ever since.

So, graduates don't be like me and live with a silly regret like that and by all means, "be true to your school."

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) resides on the Rosebud with his son, Beaux. He earned a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) from Harvard University. A decorated Vietnam Veteran, he is functionally literate in Lakota and worked at Sinte Gleska University for 20 years as Dean/Chair of Tribal and Graduate Studies.

OLC library to host Leon Hale and Jamie Lee, storyteller and author May 14

KYLE - Oglala Lakota College's Woksape Tipi will be hosting Leon Hale, Cheyenne River Sioux, storyteller and author on Monday, May 14 from 1 to 3 p.m. at the academic and public library on the Piya Wiconi campus.

Hale is storyteller of Washaka, The Bear Dreamer, authored by Jamie Lee of Rapid City.

Washaka is the story of a young Lakota boy named Little Chief who dreams of a white bear tied to a tree and bleeding at the neck. His grandfather tells him that dreams come from Tunkasila and are wakan, or sacred. Grandfather says that one day he will find the bear of his dream-or something like it-and must free it. When Little Chief later finds one of the Others, a white boy tied to a tree and bleeding at the neck, he knows this is Mato Ska, the white bear of his dream.

Leon Hale and Jamie Lee, will be the college library on May 14.

The story of how Washaka came to be written is a tale all its own. While scribbling in a café one winter, Lee said a Lakota man approached her and asked if she would consider writing his dream into a book. Curious, she invited him to sit down and, within minutes of talking to Leon Hale, the book was born. Over many months, eleven sessions in all, Lee recorded Hale's dream. Lee says Leon Hale told the entire dream as if he were living in that time-as if he were

Lakota soldier helps bring lost American souls home

By Steve Young
Reprinted from the Sioux Falls Argus Leder

Sgt. Kili Bald Eagle remembers the wind. Suddenly, it rustled through the leaves and rattled the nearby branches, just as he and his group completed their search for the remains of missing American soldiers who had fallen decades earlier at the bottom of a steep ravine west of Da Nang in Vietnam.

To Bald Eagle, it was as if a spirit had just been set free.

He and the others gathered there were saying a few closing prayers "when the wind blew up through our faces, through the valley, and let us know that what we were doing was right."

"It was kind of like a sign from the spirits, or from nature itself, that there was a sense of completion," he says. "I know it was felt by the entire team."

The moment was as spiritual as it was satisfying for this 31-year-old Lakota from the Cheyenne River Reservation. For almost two years now, he has traveled to killing fields in Laos, Vietnam and Austria with recovery teams from the Joint POW/MIA Accounting Command in Hawaii to search for the remains of fallen American service members.

It is honorable, important work for this akitica, which means "warrior" in Lakota.

"When you see the pictures of the families that have closure in their lives, and you know you're part of that ... it's very rewarding," Bald Eagle says. "To know that if I was to fall in combat, someone just like myself would recover me and take as much pride as I would when I do this. ... It's just really a respect for those Little Chief. When the whole dream was recorded, she began weaving the story into a novel.

Later, Lee learned that Hale and his grandson, Little Leon, had prayed to find someone to write his story into a book.

Lee says, "There is something special about this story-it touches people of all ages, both Indian and non-Indian, and is a book the whole family can read together." Hale wanted his story to encourage his people to work together.

The event is open to the public and call 455-6069 for more information.

Tribes must admit that meth is a problem

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) - Before problems stemming from methamphetamine use on American Indian reservations can be alleviated, tribes first must acknowledge that the drug is a problem, said a member of North Dakota's Chippewa tribe, Turtle Mountain Band.

"Most people don't want to admit they have a problem as an individual, let alone a whole community," said Karrie Azure-Elliott, deputy director of the Tribal Judicial Institute.

The National Congress of American Indians reported in November that American Indians have an abuse rate of 1.7 percent, compared with 0.7 percent for whites, and that some reservations have addiction rates of 30 percent.

But many communities deny there's a meth problem, a mentality that hinders prevention and treatment, Azure-Elliott said Monday at the Midwest Methamphetamine Conference.

Meth is an addictive stimulant that can be prepared or "cooked" in makeshift labs with over-the-counter cold tablets, common household chemicals and fertilizers.

Also known as crank, ice or crystal, meth can be smoked, snorted, swallowed or injected. Meth produces a quick, strong high and can lead to paranoia and terrible fits of withdrawal.

According to the 2004 National Survey on Drug Use and Health, about 11.7 million Americans ages 12 and older said they've tried meth and 1.4 million said they'd used it in the past month.

Azure-Elliott said American Indians on reservations are susceptible to meth addictions because they often live in poverty and have limited employment opportunities - factors commonly attributed to drug use.

Another issue, she said, is the infiltration of the Mexican drug cartels into reservations for the sole purpose of selling drugs.

The American Indian congress estimates that 70 percent of all meth in the U.S. is smuggled from Mexico. Drug rings often set up shop on reservations because there are complex criminal jurisdiction issues and police forces are limited, according to the congress.

Jim Snow, vice chairman of the Winnebago tribe, said meth first came to the reservation in northeast Nebraska about five years ago.

He said efforts to curb meth use arose from community concern. A task force was set up, and prevention initiatives were implemented in the schools. Tribal police started stopping suspicious vehicles. The court system was adjusted to provide stricter punishment for meth-related crimes.

"You just got to try to use all your resources to combat this thing," he said.

Jerry Stubin, a meth researcher whose daughter is serving a six- to 10-year prison term for meth-related charges, said more American Indians are entering rehab programs for meth than alcoholism.

And one stint often isn't enough, he said. Many people are coming back four or five times. "It's really tough to treat," said Stubin, a member of the Ponca tribe.

Azure-Elliott said meth addicts have difficulty getting appropriate treatment on reservations because most programs last only for 30 to 45 days, and it takes 18 months to get the drug completely out of the body.

"It's such an addictive drug," she said.

Snow said the Winnebago utilize state treatment programs offered by Nebraska and South Dakota and have been requesting longer stays to help people kick the habit for good.

who have gone before you."

In the blood

Bald Eagle understands that sense of history very well. His father, Dave Bald Eagle, is a chief of the Mnicoujou band on the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe who parachuted onto the beaches at Normandy during World War II and served as a codetalker during that conflict.

His great-grandfather, Chief White Bull, was an ally of Sitting Bull and led one of the attacks at Little Big Horn.

Bald Eagle joined the National Guard after his junior year of high school and enlisted in the regular Army in 1996. He is on loan to JPAC from the 82nd Airborne Division out of Fort Bragg, N.C.

"I come from a long line of warriors who believes very much in service to my country," he says. "There are not a lot of jobs on the reservation, so it was a career option for me. But I also wanted to follow in my father's footsteps."

Trained initially in the Army as a combat engineer, Bald Eagle now uses those skills to negotiate the most difficult terrains in an effort to find missing service members.

On seven trips to Laos, one to Vietnam and one to Austria, his engineering expertise has created bridges, built dams, arranged the ropes for team members to rappel down the side of cliffs, and otherwise provided access to hard-to-reach locales.

"Often times, the team has a need to create infrastructure unique to the situations we find ourselves in," his team leader, Maj. George Eyster, says. "Invariably, we've turned to Sgt. Bald Eagle to figure out the plan and oversee the construction."

Bald Eagle also is involved in setting up screening areas to sift through the dirt for bone material, teeth and other evidence of human remains.

"Bone material is ideal. A tooth is ideal," Bald Eagle says. "We also find a lot of life support equipment ... pieces of a flight jacket, a helmet or a mask. Parachute material is really nice to find. And ID tags are a big thing."

Trail of evidence

On each mission, they bring with them a case file that tells them who they might be looking for and why they could be there. That includes details of battles and the recollections of other service members who were part of those battles.

For example, if there was an ambush, Bald Eagle says they can trace the trail of evidence down the side of a mountain. Bullet shells here, a piece of boot there, an eyeglass lens down the path - all give testimony to the chaos that drove men to their deaths.

The memories of locals help, too. They often are hired for their knowledge and to work with the recovery team, Bald Eagle says.

"I learn a lot from the locals, and not just about the site we're working at," he says. "You learn about their culture. You learn how to deal with the animals you encounter."

Once while clearing out an area, he cut down a tree that was hollow inside and discovered that he had sliced through two bamboo viper snakes. Another time, while sharpening his tools, he suddenly noticed a king cobra snake no more than 10 feet away.

"Basically, you remain calm in a situation like that and get the locals over there to deal with it," he says. "Of course, if it's right there at my feet, I'm going to hack off its head just like it's a rattlesnake."

But Bald Eagle would just as soon let it slither away. For among the Lakota, there is a brotherhood among all living things. And her son is very sensitive to that way of thinking, Josee Bald Eagle says.

"Kili is a very, very sensitive boy," his 65-year-old mother says from the family's ranch near Howes in South Dakota. "He'll be the one that goes down on his stomach to admire a flower. What soldier stops for a flower? But he'll go down on his knees to look at something beautiful. He has a kind of spiritual side."

Going on instinct

Her son has an instinctive side as well, Josee Bald Eagle says, one that allows him to know something is near when America's most technologically advanced gizmos don't see it.

"He feels where things are at," his mother says. "He'll tell them, 'You need to look on this site.' And they'll say, 'No, no, no, the coordinates we have say it's over here.' Inevitably, they'll find it where he told them in the first place."

What he has, Bald Eagle says, is simply a deep sense of respect for the work he does and a sense of accomplishment when they find remains.

It is a difficult job, one that takes him away for long stretches from his family back in Pinehurst, N.C. - his wife, Dezi, his 3-year-old son Enoch, his 4-month-old daughter Arianna, and a baby on the way.

And he seldom knows the identity of the remains they find. That's the work of the anthropologists at Hickam Air Force Base in Hawaii.

Still, Bald Eagle does experience a sense of closure, one that he hopes the families of those missing service members come to know as well.

"One of the things we like to say when we close every prayer is, Mitakuye Oyasin, 'we are all related,' " he says. "All spirits are interlinked with each other in some way, shape or form.

"So when I see possible remains, I immediately get a sense of accomplishment. You know that spirit is finally going to be able to come home."

Sgt. Kili Bald Eagle, a combat engineer assigned to the Joint POW/MIA Accounting Command, shares snacks and his iPod with Lao children while on a lunch break.

ASK ANNA

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I am writing for the first time and I am looking for some direction in my life. I have had a go of it and am trying to complete my schooling and figure out what to do next.

At times I become very confused. I am also having some family issues and things are not what they seem, any insight would sure be appreciated.

Looking for direction

Dear Looking for direction:

Looks like the health field is the place you want to be and the place I see you.

Education is the key to all of your dreams so keep up the good work. That will allow you to establish a home of your own where your family member's chaos will cease to directly affect you so very much.

I see a sibling in trouble, making bad decisions and partying way too much. There is trouble in the future there for sure; but it is not your trouble. Allow yourself to continue to love and bless your family - but please do not make excuses for them.

They have their own lessons to learn and are choosing a path that will lead them in a less than successful direction. Keep to your own path; pray for them and keep doing the good things you are doing.

Your mother seems to be having personal problems of her own - don't offer any advice, don't coddle her with sympathy (because it just makes her think she is helpless), and don't worry so much. She is an adult and can work this out on her own.

Good Luck and keep up the good work. Someday you will be thankful of all the things that you are going through for they bring you the opportunity to develop and keep compassion and wisdom.

Dear Anna,

Did my boyfriend molest my little girl? He says he didn't and I want to believe him but the medical tests say she has been molested. Is he guilty?

If he isn't then who is?

Mother in pain

Dear Mother in pain:

No, your boyfriend is innocent - but I would take a real hard look at your daughter's father. I could be wrong because I have a lot of fear around this and sometimes that inhibits my ability to see clearly. But something there isn't right. Your daughter is being pressured and has been coached in her answer to say who did it - that much I know.

I will pray for you and your daughter and ask others to do the same.

Dear Anna,

Who stole my $50? It was in my bedroom, did one of my brothers or sisters take it or their friend. Who took it?

Lost fifty bucks

Dear Lost fifty bucks:

You said it - you L-O-S-T it. It was not stolen. It was in your pocket for safe-keeping and you L-O-S-T it at school. I bet somebody was happy when they "found" fifty bucks on the floor in the bathroom.

Sorry.

Dear Anna,

How are you? Well I have a few?'s for you: Am I ever going to have children?

Will I ever find someone to have a relationship with?

Or get married? I also ran in to an old exboyfriend over the weekend and I was wondering will I ever be with him again? and will I ever get over the man I used to be with?

Lost in thoughts

Dear Lost in thoughts:

Your lost in lust; not thoughts. Yes, you will have children. You are so young that I want you to consider the following truth:

1.Young woman meets young man (before the age of 20) and decides she "needs" him to be complete.

2. Young woman and young man decide they are in love.

3. Young woman wants to prove her love and young man is territorial and so want her to prove her love by having a child.

4. They have a child.

5, Young man can't get job because he is not educated and young woman has baby and has trouble finding work.

6. Young man freaks out at the responsibility and wants to party with his friends to get away from his trouble.

7. After a lot of abuse from both the young man and the young woman they separate.

8. Young man can't pay child support and young woman is constantly angry and abusive to her child because she can't cope.

9. After many stops in the local jail and treatment both parents finally get their heads out of their xxxx's, and go back to school.

Get the drift? It is where you are headed. Change directions. Take care of yourself. Get an education. Figure out that you should never get with a guy out of neediness, but out of an adult decision to share good lives together. Relax and enjoy your school years because adulthood is a very long road. Make your road easy. Do it better.

P.S. A man you are not with from your past is a good man not to be with.

Grandma,
A baby cradled in your arms…
Teaching me your gentle charms.
Growing up with you by my side…
Learning from you never to lie.
To understand and not judge too…
Love and kindness I also learned from you.
Through the years you watched me grow…
Listening to every word I've said.
And every word I've wrote you've read…
You've been there for me to the end.
Until the day for you, God did send…
Now you watch me from up above.
Shining down on me your heavenly love…
I will miss you with all my heart.
Thank you for being there from the start…

This poem is in memory of my grandma Dora who left us 5 months ago. I think of You everyday and I miss you all the time. I miss our talk and I miss your laugh. I Miss your strength and I miss your advice. It's been hard trying to get through These months without you but Teron always tells me not to be sad cause Unci is in Heaven. I love you each and everyday and I miss you, but I know your resting Peacefully.
Love your granddaughter

Red Cloud leads the nation in Gates scholars

Gates scholarships worth as much as $250,000 each

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - Over the last three years, Red Cloud High School has had more students selected for the Gates Millennium Scholarship than any other high school in the country. A total of 17 students from Red Cloud have been chosen over that period for the scholarship that potentially is worth as much as $250,000.00 each. This year there are seven Gates Scholars at Red Cloud and Monument Valley, both second to the 10 selected at Santa Fe Indian School. Pine Ridge has three, Little Wound, Dupree, Todd County and Marty all have two while Crow Creek, and Lower Brule have one.

If eligible and selected, the Gates will cover your education through a bachelor's degree, a master's degree and a doctorate at any college or university of your choice. To be eligible the student needs to be Native American, maintain at least a 3.3 grade point average through their high school years, be Pell Grant eligible, demonstrate

Movie Review

RAPID CITY - The television cable network HBO premiered their epic movie 'Bury My Heart At Wounded Knee' last Thursday at Rapid City at the Rushmore Plaza Civic Center theatre. The film will air on the HBO cable series on May 27 at 7 p.m. on the local network.

The event was hosted by Mayor Jim Shaw of Rapid City, who gave a short speech before the film, noting three sets of numbers, which were 1492, 1868 and 1874 and gave a brief summary of each.

In 1492, is when Christopher

Students 'awesome' in The Green Archer

KYLE - High school students had a taste of broadway this past month as they presented their drama "The Green Archer" to the public.

The play was presented to the community and public four times on May 15, 16 and 21 and 22 at the amphitheatre.

The Green Archer, a Baker Play written by Tim Kelly and based on the novel by Edgar Wallace. This adaptation of an story finds Michael Bellamy inheriting Garr Castle, but his brother, Abel Bellamy (Alvin Tyon, as usual making Oil-Can Harry look smooth), has him imprisoned unjustly and moves into the castle himself. When Michael's wife, Elaine Bellamy (Tara One Horn), fails to return after visiting Abel, her sister Mrs. Howett (Emily Charging Crow), accompanied by her daughter, Valerie, Megan Yellow Boy, detective, JoDon Shangreaux who incidentally was posing as a butler, and reporter Spike Holland (Wiyaka His Horse is Thunder) determined to investigate the case. Abel is afraid they will discover his association with a gang of jewel thieves and desperately -desperate is the only word - tries to have them all killed, and anybody else that might be standing around wondering. Each attempt is thwarted by the sudden appearance of the mysterious Green Archer, who is

One Feather's occupation of Slim Buttes protests uranium

RAPID CITY (AP) - Harold One Feather arrived at Slim Buttes in Custer National Forest a week ago Sunday and said he was waging a lone protest intended to prod the U.S. Forest Service into a quicker cleanup of an old uranium mine.

``I'm a true environmentalist,'' One Feather said in a telephone interview. ``I'm actually out in the environment.''

One Feather said he was ``occupying'' Slim Buttes, adding that he expected more protesters from the Standing Rock Indian Reservation.

One Feather and other reservation residents say uranium mine runoff might be making people sick.

``The answer to that is a proven 'no,'" said Laurie Walters-Clark, a Forest Service spokeswoman.

The Forest Service has not responded to One Feather's one-man occupation.

``I saw him on the road,'' Walters-Clark said. ``He's not doing anything illegal. He's just using his national forest.''

The Grand River runs from the forest through Standing Rock reservation communities to the east.

The Forest Service is checking the extent of contamination caused by at least one small uranium mine in the Slim Buttes. That investigation is expected to be complete by the end of this summer, according to Walters-Clark, the Forest Service's on-scene coordinator for a $20 million Superfund cleanup of uranium mines set to begin this summer in the nearby Cave Hills.

In 2005, a Forest Service study found levels of uranium, arsenic, molybdenum and other metals were higher than normal on private and federal lands near the mines. A study released this year by the School of Mines and Technology reached a similar conclusion.

``Most of the health risks would be from ingesting materials,'' Walters-Clark said.

The Forest Service had been studying the problem for years, she said. ``It's simply a long process. The Forest Service had to prove there was a hazard.''

Contamination from uranium mines on the national forest did not threaten the health of people who live on the Grand River, which the state monitors, Walters-Clark said. ``There are state laws and regulations, and we're adhering to them.''

The agency has not been able to convince One Feather and others that the old uranium mines pose no threat. ``There's a lack of trust,'' Walters-Clark said.

Columbus landed his ships on our shores, in 1868, the United States government offered a treaty at Fort Laramie, guaranteeing to the Lakota, ownership of the Black Hills, and further land and hunting rights in South Dakota, Wyoming, and Montana. In 1874, General George Custer's expedition discovered gold in the Black Hills, which henceforth lead to the Indian wars, the Battle of Little Big Horn, and the diminishment of the Sioux lands to what they are today.

That is what Dee Brown's 'Bury My Heart At Wounded Knee' book is about. He wrote a nonfiction account of the final years of conflict between the United States and the Sioux people it sought to displace by any means necessary.

Shaw also noted to the audience his efforts to coordinate a sister city relationship with Rapid City and Pine Ridge. He said the movie depicted a part of history and we need to move forward, "to teach our children to look past of today and move to the future."

Screenwriter Daniel Giat crafted the movie script from the book and although historical accounts are somewhat jumbled in the movie, the historical trauma that Lakota people suffered through the loss of their land is highlighted in the movie.

The movie also depicts the 1868 treaty and why it was crafted by the government and more so how the Lakota people refused to sell their land and in credit notes at the end of the movie, it was reemphasized that to this day, the tribes still refused to acknowledge the settlement of the Black Hills money and that there is more than $600 million that is still untouched by the tribes.

Actually, there is a little more than that. Several years ago, the former Cheyenne River Sioux tribe chairman Gregg Bourland noted at that time there was $744 million in trust. This has grown over time from the original amount offered to the people.

The movies focuses on the lives of three men and those are Sen. Henry Dawes who is played by Aidan Quinn. Dawes clearly sympathizes with the Sioux people and works to bring some sort of justice for them in the impending loss of their land.

Adam Beach gives an outstanding performance in the character of Dr. Charles Eastman, a Sioux boy, whose father who took the Christian beliefs and pushed him to be educated who becomes educated. The third main actor was Sitting Bull, charactized by August Shellenberg. The movie focuses on portion's of Sitting Bull's life from the once defiant warrior to the stubborn elder forced to live on the reservation and finally his death.

The movie ends with Sitting Bull's death and the Wounded Knee massacre.

Although some of the accounts aren't historically factual, the movie is an educational piece that will promote history and is emotionally compelling to what happened to our ancestors and why we are today living with reservation life.

It was emotional for me, because my mother and father and my grandparents lived that story. The stories of the boarding schools and the stories of the loss of language and the poverty.

The movie also lets viewers know that as Lakota/Nakota/Dakota people, we didn't sell the Black Hills and we didn't take the money.

It also depicts the trauma that our ancestors had to go through with the loss of the land, having to adapt to customs they weren't used to such as the church, the loss of living on the land to dealing with rations, the boarding schools and emotional pain of what happened at the Wounded Knee massacre, where several hundred Lakota people were slaughtered by the military.

Being Lakota and knowing the history of the people, watching those parts were hard to swallow, truthfully it hurt to watch and it can be very emotional.

Regardless, this movie will educate millions of people on our history, the fight for the Black Hills and the trauma of our past. HBO must have spent millions to film this movie, it's moving and it educates the public about the government's role in the history of the Sioux people. Although some may not agree with the jumbled history, the land issue was real and still is real today.

The movie 'Bury My Heart at Wounded Knee' took six years to develop and film according to Tom Thayer, a producer.

leadership abilities through participation in community services, extracurricular activities or other activities and provide answers to a number of essay questions. The Gates Scholarship is a product of the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation; Bill Gates is one of the founders of Microsoft Corporation and is one of the richest individuals in the world.

"Without the Gates, it would have been really difficult for me to attend Creighton University in Omaha," said Donnel Ecoffey a fifth year senior in the fall of 2007 majoring in sociology with minors in Native American studies and English who plans to continue her studies towards a master's degree in social work, "the scholarship takes a lot of the pressure off to come up with tuition and living monies while you pursue a college education, it's been wonderful."

Gates scholars this year from Red Cloud include Monique Claymore, Sammi Herman, Samantha Janis, Tanner O'Daniel, Matt Shoulders, Allison Weston and Kaylynn Two Bulls. Last year Rianna Albers (University of Minnesota), Jordan Herman and Brandi Shortman (Creighton University), Larissa Little Moon, Dallas Nelson and Marissa O'Bryan (University of South Dakota) were 2006 Red Cloud Gates recipients. Jason Clifford, Blue Dawn Little, Shayna Richards and Sarah White rounded out the three year Red Cloud total of 17 students.

"The Gates makes it possible for some of our students to go to college, it gives the student the confidence to pursue a college education," said Fr. Paul Coelho, Red Cloud principal, "the scholarship gives our students a sudden sense of self confidence, they realize that they have what it takes to make it in college; if someone is willing to invest as much as $250,000.00 in their college education, then they realize that they are worthwhile after all."

Dave Michaud graduated this year from Pine Ridge High School, he was the valedictorian as well as recipient of the Jim Thorpe Award as an outstanding athlete; he earned a Gates Scholarship and plans to attend South Dakota State University, majoring in journalism and play football.

"During high school, I really wanted to go to either University of Wyoming or SDSU, work on a degree and play football, the Gates really gave me some freedom to make a choice and will really help me reach my goals," said Dave Michaud.

He also won the state championship in wrestling this year in the 189 pound division.

Cheryl Cedar Face and Roxanne Herman also were selected for the Gates out of Pine Ridge High School this year. Cheryl plans to attend either the University of South Dakota or Creighton University in the fall.

Last year's Pine Ridge valedictorian, Tamera Long received the Gates as well and after a year at Oglala Lakota College will attend Black Hills State University in Spearfish in the fall.

"For a long time I dreamed of going to a school like Duke University in North Carolina but I just didn't think that was possible," said Sadie In The Woods, a 2006 Little Wound graduate, "the Gates scholarship has made that possible, they can't do the work for you but I've now finished my first year at Duke and I know I can make it to get a bachelors and even a graduate degree and the Gates helps to make it possible."

Shawntay Lupi, a 2005 graduate of Little Wound has just completed her second year at South Dakota State University in Brookings and feels strongly that her dream of becoming a dentist is possible because the Gates will cover the cost of her education through her undergraduate degree and through her professional degree. “It is very helpful to me as I work hard in college to get a degree and look ahead to graduate school wherever I want to go, Lupi said, it is a very special scholarship,” she said.

"For students just starting out in high school, I can't tell you how important it is to take every class serious," said Marissa O'Bryan, a Red Cloud 2006 graduate and class valedictorian who has just finished her freshman year at USD, "high school students need to realize that every class counts, every grade is important as you look ahead to the possibilities that you may have for college, the Gates makes a lot of dreams possible."

"Our students come in with a strong foundation and we build on it," said Coelho, "we have teachers committed to a strong academic program and we have a strong school culture that prepares our students to succeed, the school culture is critical so that everyone involved wants the student to succeed so each of our students want to be academically successful."

The cast delivered a powerful performance and did an awesome job.

Dan Snethen has been directing plays at Little Wound High School for 11 years. The Green Archer was his 12 dramatic production at Little Wound High School. "This group of actors, actresses and behind the scenes personages are absolutely the best cast it has ever been my honor to assemble here at Little Wound High School. They were simply amazing! and of course my assistant director Amelie Wegner is quite special too," Snethen said.

A parent Vonnie Bush said, "I did not anticipate The Green Archer to be acted out so passionately, which resulted in a fascinating two hours. The students put their hearts into their acting and didn't seem to miss a beat throughout the entire play. The students displayed tons of courage and the obvious discipline that was needed to produce such an outstanding performance. Tasunka Witko Head Start holds 2007 graduation at Ghost Hawk Park

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - The temperature held steady at a comfortable level as many young Sicangu parents, their Head Start students and Head Start teachers and aides assembled slowly at Ghost Hawk Park to celebrate the 2007 Tasunke Witko Head Start Center.

As personnel put the finishing touches on the decorations 19 Head Start graduates were seated in their small chairs on the stage as the festivities began. Pedro Red Hawk offered an invocation, while Chief John Spotted Tail served as the unofficial eyapaha.

The Head Start graduates kicked off the ceremony with two songs, the "alphabet song" and Twinkle Little Star" and received a nice ovation afterward.

The assembled crowd seemed to number well into 50 to 60 people not including the children as the ceremony began with several young parents receiving "certificates of appreciation" for either attending meetings, being a good father, donating their time or spending time in the Head Start classroom.

Spotted Tail said that he was asked to be a stand-in for Rosebud Sioux tribal president, Rodney M. Bordeaux, who was in a council meeting. He gave an encouraging talk to the graduates and proceeded to give out the diplomas as each child stood up and received their certificates. Each one was allowed a chance to say what they wanted to be when they grow up one day. A couple of children said they wanted to grow up to be a princess, while other wanted to be teachers and doctors.

Among the parents who received certificates were, Buffy Clifford, Ted Running Bear, Eric Nixon, Melissa Nixon, Eric Black Lance, Theodore Burning Breast, James Henry, Sauna Provancial, Bob Oliver, Theodore Running Bear, Michael Lynn, Michelle Leader Charge, Latoya Conners, Hope Henry, Miranda Roubideaux, Antoinette Black Spotted Horse, and Michael Whirlwind Soldier.

Head Start head teacher, Chauncia Poor Bear said after the ceremony that she was very proud of the parental participation at the ceremony as 100 percent of the parents were involved. Poor Bear is working on her associate of arts in early childhood education and currently holds a child development associate certificate. She has been at the Tasunka Witko Headstart for four years.

A couple of honoring songs were sung by Red Hawk, while Archie Little of St. Francis also sang an honor song and a beautiful meal blessing song.

The class of 2007 Tasunke Witko Head Start class included, Aloni Badmilk, Darion Bettelyoun, Destiny Black Calf, Maria Black Lance, Tristan Black Moon, Benjamin Burning Breast, Trinity Burning Breast, Devon Eagle Bear, Jayce Henry, Kateria Herman, Daniel Hollow Horn Bear, Anaya Horse Looking, Jason Kimmel Jr., Anatanpi Nixon, Kimimila Picotte, Kobe Running Bear, Artimust Spotted Calf, Michael Whirlwind Soldier and Tilyss White.

One cake decorated with pink and the other trimmed in blue was served to all after the ceremony which concluded around 2:30 p.m. There are 16 centers across the Rosebud.

Todd County School Middle graduates 93 in achievement ceremony

MISSION - It was nearly a packed house as the Rosebud reservation community, parents, and families came together to honor 93 graduates from the Todd County Middle School. Two separate achievement ceremonies were held, one at 10:00 am for one team of students, while the three other teams graduated at 1:30 p.m.

It was a nostalgic time as Dr. Richard Bordeaux will be retiring at the end of his contract period and Dr. Margo Heinert will assume the superintendent's position. RST Antelope council representative, Robert Moore, gave a brief encouraging message to the graduates, while Clay Colombe delivered the commencement address pointing out that it is the parents and community who will continue to make the difference for the students as they progress up through higher education.

TCMS teacher, Sage Fast Dog, hosted the portion of the program during which parents who wished to tie a feather and medicine wheel were able to do that while Fast Dog sang the four directions song and Walt Hernandez prayed for the students. The TCMS middle school drum group "Igmu Watogla" did the honors for the event, while three dancers led the graduates into the gym. The dancers were Jonas Bear Heels, Annnessa Clairmont and Nina Tamayo. The sponsor for the drum group is teacher, Gilbert Stewart.

An "I Movie" was flashed on the north wall with musical accompaniment as a baby picture and current picture of each student was shown to the applause of all present.

The class motto for the 2007 TCMS graduates was "Success is Journey not a Destination."

Field hearing June 1 for law enforcement

LOWER BRULE (AP) - Law enforcement issues on reservations will be the subject of a special field hearing of the House Natural Resources Committee at Lower Brule.

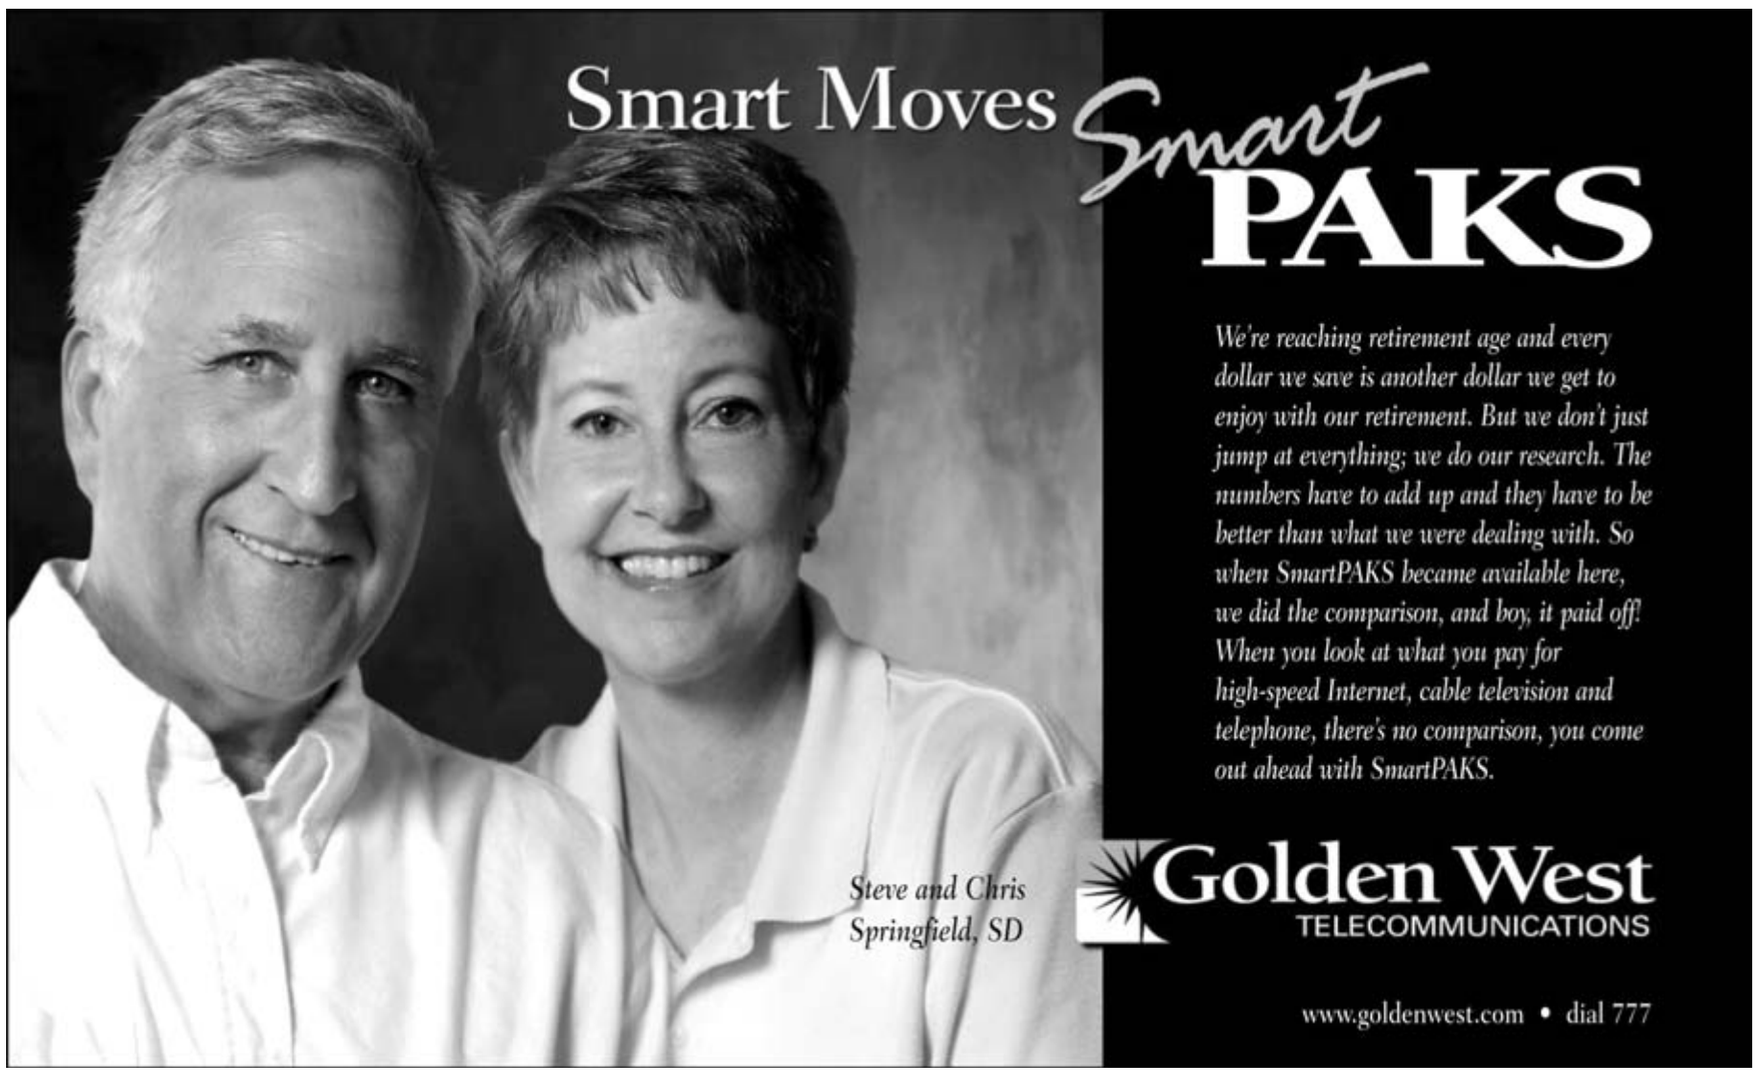
Rep. Stephanie Herseth Sandlin, D-S.D., will host the hearing, which will be on Friday, June 1.

Herseth Sandlin said the hearing would be the first Indian affairs field hearing the Natural Resources Committee has ever held.

She has been a member of the committee since she was elected to Congress in June 2004. The committee has jurisdiction over American Indian issues and issues related to national forests, national parks and fisheries and wildlife.

Three panels of witnesses will testify, including tribal chairmen from South Dakota. They will discuss violence against women, reservation jails and other law enforcement issues.

"The goal of this hearing will be to hear direct testimony from tribal leaders from around the state to explore how the federal government can better assist tribal governments in meeting basic public safety and law enforcement goals," Herseth Sandlin said in a written statement from her office.



Legislator calls for inquiry on gas prices

RAPID CITY - Gasoline has hit a record high national average price of $3.18 a gallon, and a South Dakota legislator says it's time to do something about it.

State Senator Frank Kloucek of Scotland has asked the state's congressional delegation to immediately initiate a congressional inquiry into dramatic price increases for gasoline and other fuels.

He also says wholesalers should be monitored to prevent illegal ethanol blending.

Kloucek adds that the current ten-percent ethanol blend should be raised to 20 percent.

Thoughts that come from the heart

Emotions sell, entertainment industry makes billions from it

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett
EDITOR AND PUBLISHER
LAKOTA COUNTRY TIMES

It always amazes me on how much energy can be vested into something when that something strikes the emotional chords in our hearts.

We see that time and time again in the media when people don't agree on certain issues, the issue is played out in the media, whether it be in the newspaper, radio or television or the rez grapevines. Energy goes into the issue, much energy. Most of the time it is negativity energy, we get angered by something we view as negative. It touches our emotions, especially if it those emotions such as anger, sadness, sorrow, jealousy, or sometimes pride.

It touches our emotions to a point where we get uncomfortable with it so we do something about it. And when we do, we put energy into it, and when a whole lot of us do, we put a whole lot of energy into it.

There are times some of us wonder how much more better our lives would be, especially on the reservation, if people in power or who have the ability and skills to make their communities better would use that energy to do so.

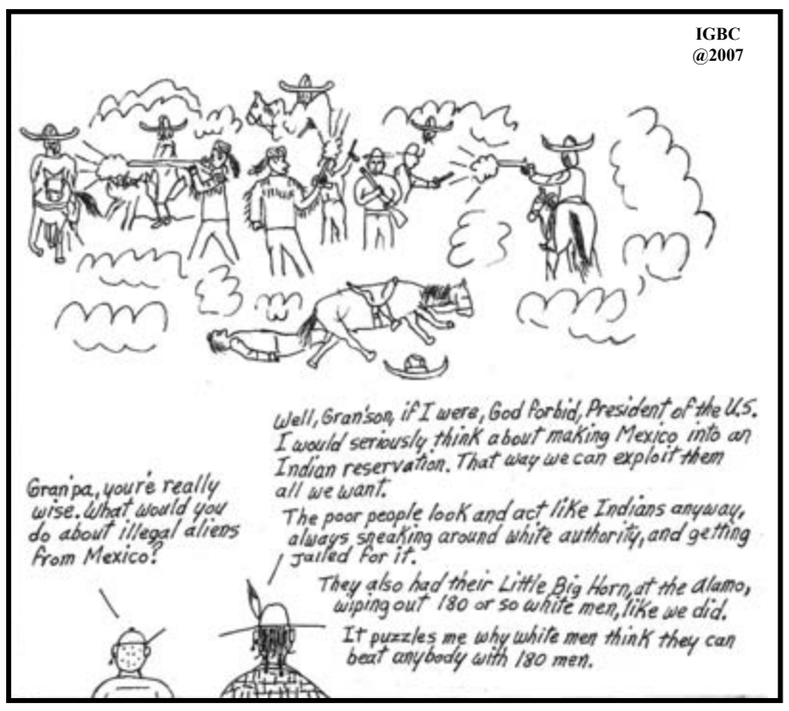
Too many times we see that happen on the reservation, when something negative happens on the reservation it gets splashed on the front pages of the media or blared across the television screen. That happens because that type of energy sells. When you have something that touches the emotions of people it will sell.

It's called entertainment and it's an industry that makes billions of dollars. The media sells emotions, the music industry sells emotions, movie industry sells emotions and when something happens on the reservation that strikes emotional chords, somebody makes money somewhere. Somebody sees it happening and they go after it, because it will sell for them, whether it be our daily papers that serve the reservations, our local televisions or some writer that wants to write a book about it. It sells.

Being in the media business for more than 25 years, it's always the same issues, they don't change. It's the tribal politics, it's the high rate of alcoholism, it's the death rates, the infant mortality, it's the embezzlements, it's the poverty, or the ugly head of racism.

It's the same issues, only the players changed after 25 years.

And I am guilty of that too, and I cringe when I do it. An issue may come up that is highly emotional, whether it be death, suicide, tribal politics or disease, we print it because it's news and we try do it in a fair way and an angle that means something to the Lakota people.



Maybe if we do it in a way to promote understanding of the issue, it may promote change.

In the 25 years, I have been in the media business, our tribal governments, our tribal leaderships and our tribal organizations are still learning the ropes of how the media works around them.

Today, I am in the newspaper business, because I believe as Lakota people we need to help promote our identity and as Lakota people, we need to promote our language and our spirituality.

We have tons of good things happening in our communities and only we can promote that.

Because it feels good to see that in the open and most of all it, it makes our kid's feel good to see that. It gives them identity.

Words from the 'trenches'

Excitement is where you find it

Connie Smith-Blanco

I'm starting my column early, on Tuesday afternoon, just in case the electricity goes off again (without warning of course) like it did an hour ago.

Actually we've been pretty lucky here in our spacious, cramped computer filled office, because the electricity has never gone off on us on a Tuesday before.

I don't know why I'm down here working anyway, we have a new office upstairs but I still find myself on the computer in this office. Maybe it's because there's more excitement going on in this office.

Tuesdays are important around here (it's our 'hurry up and finish before Wednesday gets here day'), which is almost as important as Wednesdays (Deadline day "after" the hurry up and finish day) So even though we've tried to train ourselves to "save, save, save" on our computers, we all three did a collective "uh-oh" when the lights went out.

That 'uh-oh' means we have been saving but maybe it's been over an hour since the last time we did it.

Lets just say important pages had to be redone and we discussed the value of putting a huge sign on the wall in front of us all that merely says in three foot high letters, SAVE.

Like I said Tuesdays can be exciting, like the time Amanda was typing away at her computer and her computer desk collapsed in front of her. She did a great one-handed save and was able to hold computer, keyboard, speakers, mouse and assorted piles of paper upright until Manuel and I ran to her aid.

Now that's exciting, three grown adults squealing with surprise and all talking at once about what to do for a solution.

That's what I call teamwork! Amanda and Manuel held the valuables upright while I tried to quickly find a suitable replacement for the desk. The mission was carried out with no loss of life or equipment.

Yes, the easy thing would have been to quickly pile all of her computer "things" on to her desk and continue on. But there's an unspoken rule in newspaper land, your computer cannot be on your desk.

The desk is for the old and new piles of paper, advertising manifests, faxed and printed story ideas, piles of daily telephone message slips, piles of newspapers marked for correspondent pay, coffee cups, and a nice pot of silk lilac flowers. The flowers were neatly attached to the pens by the owner, and even though most of them don't work, they still look nice on the desk.

Another Tuesday we had an out-of-town legislator, Mark DeVries drop in. The visit was nice and we snapped a picture of him reading our paper. And he really does read our paper because he has a subscription.

I don't know if any Tuesday could match the excitement of me and Amanda trying to out-run a tornado that was headed for Kyle.

That's when our office was located there. We knew the storm was coming but didn't it know it was Tuesday?

We worked at our computers until the last possible minute, and only after numerous worried phone calls from family and friends did we jump in the car to head home to Martin. Yes, our hearts were pounding a little faster than usual, as we watched the storm approach from behind us, but the paper came out on time the next day.

Just like the post office, neither rain, sleet, snow or tornados can keep us from our mission.

Speaking of the post office, they were here last week for an audit, (conveniently scheduled for a Friday). We have been working out getting our mailing system to a good point in the last few months and the this audit is part of that. Now that was exciting, a true test of the reason we keep records and save, save, save.

And that's life in the trenches - desks collapse, phone lines go dead, high speed internet can suddenly disappear - no two days are the same, even on Tuesdays and Wednesdays.

And that's our excitement and it's what keeps my heart pumping here in the trenches.

Guest Column

Our people should be the richest in this country instead of being the poorest

Dear Editor:

The Papal Bulls of 1452 and 1493; are the basis for a religious Doctrine, called the Doctrine of Discovery, which gave Christian Nations; such as Spain, Portugal, France, Holland, England, and America: a mythical excuse to dehumanize indigenous people's and "discover" (another word for stealing) their lands. They believed it was their divine right, based on the Bible, to treat Non-Christian inhabitants and their lands, as 'brute animals, less than human on "untamed lands." This racist, religious and unconstitutional policy was adopted into US Law in 1823: by Chief Justice Marshall, who deemed that under "absolute legislative law" called 'plenary Power", that Native Americans of this country lost their complete and independent sovereignty because they were not Christians when America was "discovered". (Johnson VS. McIntosh)

This gave them justification in making and breaking promises and treaties. Under the Constitution "Treaties are the Supreme Law of the Land", (until it comes to the First Americans of this country.) Even in their Bill of Rights, do they refer to us as "hostile savages". (the word "Sioux" means "vagina" in French…)

All their Founding Doctrines have made us "second-class citizens of this country. Even that wasn't enough, so they made us "wards of the government", and placed us under the "War Department", which later conveniently changed its name to the "Bureau of Indian Affairs, which in turn kept our people in continuous economic deprivation and forced poverty. And if that wasn't enough, they banned our religion until the Freedom of Religious Act of 1978.

They herded our people on concentration camps called the 'reservations." At this point, we became full fledged "prisoners of war," and our enrollment numbers are our POW numbers. They banned our traditional government and put in it's place, generic "yes men" "Hang around the forts". Called the "1934 Howard-Wheeler Indian Re-organization Act."

They are all extensions of the Government and cannot represent our people in land, mineral wealth or business issues, when it comes to the Great Lakota Nation. They cannot accept money on our behalf; such as Docket 74 A and B, which includes the Sacred Black Hills, because our People are under the status of "Prisoners of War." Until the War Department a.k.a "Bureau of Indian Affairs" is dissolved absolved and America puts our People as First Americans; our lands will always be tied up in the longest ongoing court case in the history of the United States" and we will be the victims of the longest ongoing Holocaust in the world".

The Pope needs to revoke the Papal Bulls and the Johnson vs. McIntosh needs to be overturned. Countries like Spain, Portugal, France and other countries owe us trillions of dollars for profiting off of our lands in the biggest conspiracy this globe ever encountered, against our Aboriginal, Inherent and All the rights as a Sovereign and Great Nation the world knows as the Lakota Nation.

Our past is tragic with massacres against our "Oyates" as they fought for their freedom and homeland, entire villages of women and children wiped out. Pregnant and nursing mothers, the biggest war trophy, a baby's foot still in it's moccasin, lies, treachery and deceit our people suffered under the hands of the US Government.

Who else knows the government better than the noble red man? Genocide, forced removal of entire nations, oppression, apartheid, outright thefts of land, minerals and property.

Our people should be the richest in this country instead of being the poorest.

We want Justice for the Lakota/Dakota Nation.

State's prison stats should concern officials

Hau Editor,

I wanted to thank Uncle Webster Two Hawk, Representative Robert Moore and the other tribal council Representatives for their courage and real concern for the Sicangu Oyate. Open, honest and accountable should not be dirty words or empty campaign promises. My family and I also want to send well wishes and a speedy recovery to Mr. Moore's mother. Mrs.'s Moore should be proud of her son for attempting to stop the corruption in tribal government. Corruption needs to be outlawed and those involved in illegal activities should be excluded from the Rosebud Reservation, permanently. Recently, the State of South Dakota held hearings concerning the Death Penalty issue. My mother called the administration to request they network with the other South Dakota tribes to oppose and/or demonstrate if needed, but her plea for help fell on deaf ears.

Notes From Indian Country

The key word is RESPECT

By Tim Giago
(Nanwica Kciji)
© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

In order to write this week's column I must do a 180-degree turn in my thinking about Indian casinos. I do not make this change in thinking lightheartedly.

I visited Indian casinos in South Dakota, Nebraska and Oklahoma over the past two weeks to get a feel for the impact they have on the Indian communities. For the most part the feeling was good.

There were jobs, money going out into the community, improvements in infrastructure, and a general sense of well being. But the most prevalent sense I came away with was a new and genuine feeling of "respect" from the non-Indian community.

That's right. R-E-S-P-E-CT! Aretha Franklin sang about it. Respect is a word an Indian could never expect to hear in the towns bordering their reservations.

But it is amazing the amount of respect that money can buy. Those ragtag Indians scraping by on little or nothing now have an abundance of cash in their pockets. Or at least some of them do. Those casino dollars now make the Indian people much sought after consumers. They can now buy new furniture; clothing, automobiles, appliances and they can now open bank accounts.

I recall that not too long ago when I owned a weekly newspaper one of my advertising sales people went into a local carpet store to solicit an ad for the paper.

The haughty sales manager quipped, "Oh, I didn't know Indians had carpets in their tee pees."

From a lady who prepared taxes for the IRS my sales lady heard, "Well, I know that Indians don't pay taxes," and from a local new car dealership, "Your readers just don't have the credit to buy our new cars," and finally from the manager of an upscale department store, "I don't think your readers are the kind of people that would be comfortable in our store." As Rodney Dangerfield used to say, "No respect, I don't get no respect."

But my travels to the Indian casinos also revealed that there are still many deep pockets of poverty in Indian country. If there is no population base near their casinos they will not draw enough customers to make their gaming establishments profitable.

I will not make a complete 360-degree turn for Indian gaming because I still see many serious problems.

For one, although nearly 20 years have passed since the onset of gaming in Indian country I still do not see a viable effort by the casino rich tribes to reach out to help their less fortunate brothers and sisters on the very poor Indian reservations.

Joe McKay, a 54-year-old member of the Blackfeet Tribe of Montana, a businessman with a law degree, offers a solution I find to be highly commendable.

He proposes a National Indian Gaming Tax to be levied on all Class III Indian gaming operations. The tax would be on gross revenues graduated according to income and capped at 5 percent. The money would be used to fund the Indian Development Trust Fund. The fund would then be made available to tribes without Class III gaming or to those in geographically isolated areas where a casino, even one with a Class III license, does not have the population base to make a profit.

McKay suggests that the funds be assigned according to need in the form of grants and low interest loans for infrastructure development on Indian reservations (water, sewage and sanitation), law enforcement, judiciary, health care, housing and for elderly and child care services.

A second but separate program would make funds for economic development available. McKay also suggests that the funds be managed by a Board of Commissioners to be nominated by the contributing and eligible tribes and appointed by the Assistant Secretary of Indian Affairs.

I differ with him on this point. I do not want to see more bureaucracy piled on to the equation. I would suggest that Ernie Stevens Jr., the head of the National Indian Gaming Association, develop an office within his organization to handle the trust funds for acceptance and distribution.

I would also suggest that Mr. Stevens lobby the Indian Affairs Committee to push for legislation to incorporate this tax.

And if an outright tax is unacceptable to the gaming rich tribes, perhaps Mr. Stevens can twist their arms to get them to voluntarily contribute money to an Indian Development Trust Fund under the auspices of NIGA.

McKay believes that the extremely poor conditions on many Indian reservations are totally overlooked and distorted by the wealth and prominence of the "new and rich gaming tribes."

Money talks in many ways and when it becomes the main topic for success, the poor tribes without access become footnotes. As it has been since the European incursion on this continent, the ultimate victims of those with wealth, or those seeking wealth, are the poor, traditional indigenous people still trying to retain their inherent values.

My 180-degree turn is based upon the single word "respect." But those new and wealthy Indian tribes must also learn the true meaning of that word.

They must learn to respect those Indian people that fought and died without surrendering their culture, traditions, language and sovereignty so that they, the rich tribes, could enjoy the benefits of the unlimited wealth afforded them by their casinos.

Prison stats

Mr. Moore it seems was the only tribal leader that cared enough to listen. It is no secret that bordering county jails and the state prison system have huge disparities of our Lakota incarcerated and the fact that we receive longer prison sentences should concern our tribal leaders.

How profitable it is for the state to incarcerate our Lakota Oyate? Human Rights Organizations report the average cost per inmate, per year, for state prisoners is $20,261.15.

The government pays $73.00 per Indian, per day for incarceration (could be more or less with 2007 statistics).

South Dakota Department of Corrections reports 915 Indians are incarcerated as of May 1, 2007 for a total of $24,380,175.00 paid to the state. This number does not include county jails located near reservations, nor federal prisoners.

South Dakota DOC also reports it costs an average of $41.00 dollars per day, per inmate for a total of $14,965.00 per year and $13,692,975.00 to house 915 inmates.

After doing the math, you will see the State of South Dakota makes a profit of $10,687,200.00 for incarcerating our Lakota Oyate.

The sad fact is many of our tribal members live outside the reservation and deserve tribal government to represent them on issues affecting their daily lives.

Of course, those that have committed their lives setting-up our current government to benefit each other, whether legally or illegally certainly have no intentions of ever leaving the Rosebud Indian Reservation, so why bother helping our tribal members that fall under state jurisdiction.

Needless to say, nobody from this administration opposed the death penalty or participated in the hearings.

Unresponsive government is nothing new; maybe we are used to it and come to expect it.

Finding My Voice

Write a letter to a younger you

Dana Badmilk

Write a letter to a younger you. I seen this in Oprah (the magazine) the other day... thought it was a great idea. I thought hard about what age I would write to me at and I picked 18. That is the age that I made many life changing decisions and now I see I wasn't mature enough at the time, or too stubborn to really realize what I was doing. . I am thinking, maybe, I will show my daughter this when she is 18.

Letter to 18 year old Dana

Dear Dana,

First off I want to tell you that your life doesn't revolve around a man. You don't have to wonder if you are making him happy or not. You do have to worry about whether you are really happy, or whether you think you feel happy because you are with him. A relationship is give and take. You can only give so much. Don't give so much that you walk around unhappy, suspicious, and wondering what you did wrong. You are smarter than him. Don't stroke his ego and give him the power to control your feelings. Deep down inside, you know it's really you that has the power to control your heart and decide who you share it with. Don't ever slap anyone up if a man cheats on you, because BELIEVE me it is not worth it and drags you down to that level. You deserve so much more.

Speaking of what you deserve, you mama taught you better than that and you know it. It is ok to buy yourself a 40 dollar bottle of perfume and not feel guilty. Treat yourself. This is an example of making yourself happy. Listen to your mother more. She is the strongest woman you know.

Get your education. As soon as possible. Life is hard and only going to get harder...especially if you want children. I would never discourage you from having children, they are a joy and will make your future so much more enjoyable. But, get that education. Don't look at obstacles as road blocks., only detours.

Keep your journals. Don't ever ever mistake sex for love if you are single. As I said earlier, you control your emotions. Love yourself before trying to fall in love.

Take care of yourself in all aspects; physically, emotionally, and secure your future with an education. Nothing can stop you and believe that.

Some pointers.

Just because a man can be sweet, do your hair, do your make-up, make you wear clothes in your closet you never dared...and take you out on the town, doesn't mean you can trust him. Just because he is gay, doesn't mean he is automatically cool or a saint. He is still human....be careful and choose your friends wisely.

Don't lose time with relatives over petty stuff. Treasure that time.

Don't ever.....EVER break up with a guy because he is "too nice." Bad boys will only break your heart.

Don't ever get a perm to make your hair curly.

Don't sell yourself short on your artwork....especially if you make a beaded painting.

Don't ever bartend in a dress that seems too short. People will lie to you and tell you it's not. If it feels too short, it is. Stick to the skirts or slacks. Assuming, of course, that you will bartend someday... though you may not since you should be in school. Of course, that is if...you are an exceptional 18 year old that can take advice and not know it all already.

If you ever work for a place that sends you to Florida for two weeks, it is ok to go out and party a couple of nights. Don't feel guilty if the rest of your family is sitting in the cold. PARTY! (Please for the love of god, party at least one day)

And keep better in touch with friends....the true ones, that over the years are still friends. .

And remember...don't ever wear glasses that are trendy! No matter how cool you think you look at the time!

Love....you,
Dana

I found writing a letter to my younger self to be very therapeutic and healing. Even if we can't change the past, we can recognize and move on. Give it a try.

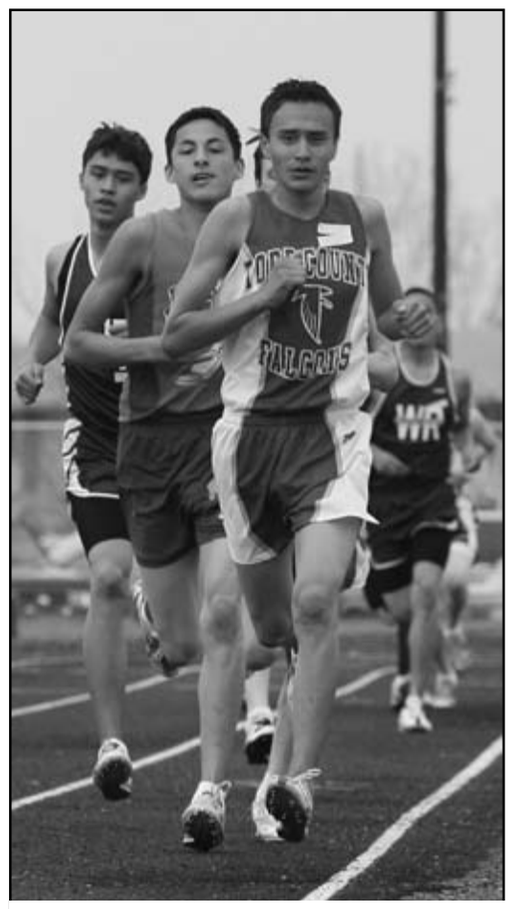
Todd County, Red Cloud lead the way in State A track meet qualifiers

Pine Ridge's Wilson, Takini's Mendoza set pace

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent



LENNOX - The 2007 State A track meet is set for Friday in Lennox with the finals scheduled for Saturday in Sioux Falls. Todd County has qualified 20 athletes, Red Cloud 15 and Pine Ridge eight to lead the way.

Alex Wilson, Pine Ridge won the 800, 1600 and 3200 on Thursday in Mission at the Region 7A track meet while Kiko Mendoza, Takini, won both the 1600 and 3200 and hopes to add to his state cross country titles this week.

Going into the state meet, Kiko has the best qualifying time in the 1600 of 4:32 and the best time in the 3200 with 9:49.

Todd County girls qualified in the 4X800 and the 1600 sprint medley and includes Julie Bernie, Lisa Two Charge, Lorna Her Many Horses, Shelby Hunger, Kyla Marshall, Tia McCloskey, Wendy Smaltz, Josie Stone, Arna Two Hawk and Kylie Wilson. The top two finishers in the region qualify as an individual and Marshall made it in the 1600 while Wilson made it in the 3200. crystal Salway made it in the discus. For the Falcon boys, they qualified in the 4X100, 4X200, 4X400, 4X800 and the 1600 sprint medley and included Jaden and Jarret Allen, LaBradford Eagle Deer, Albert Her Many Horses, Noah Kilonzo, Gunner Krogman, Ray Lo, Charlie Moe and Marc Whirlwind Soldier. Whirlwind Soldier qualified in the 1600 and the 3200 and Krogman also made it in the long jump and the triple jump.

Last year Red Cloud had one participant in the State A track meet, this year there are 15 with the girls qualifying in the 4X400, 4X800 and the 1600 sprint medley; Desirae Blacksmith also made it in the 3200 while Shaina Clifford qualified in both the 100 and the 200. The Red Cloud boys made it in the 4X800 and include Chante Knight, Billy Scott, Wade O'Bryan, Christian McGhee, Art Vitalis and Ezra Zephier.

Marc Whirlwind Soldier, Todd County freshman, leads William White Buffalo, Jones County junior and Frankie Waln, White River junior, in the 1600 meter run during an earlier track meet in Kadoka in preparation for the 2007 State track set for Friday and Saturday; Whirlwind Soldier qualified in the 1600 and 3200, White Buffalo in the 800 and 1600 and Waln in the 1600.

In addition to Wilson, Pine Ridge qualified in the 1600 sprint medley with Juan Ramos, James Pine, Jim Waln, Dave Michaud and Roman Leftwich. Sophia Janis made it in the long jump as well.

Jordan Wohlleber led a contingent of six girls from Cheyenne Eagle Butte into the State A meet. Wohlleber, a freshman, won the State A cross country championship and has the best qualifying time in the 3200 and the second fastest time in the 1600.

Little Wound dominates boy's all star team with McGhee, Middletent cracking top five

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

For the third year in a row, Lakota Country Times and KILI Radio 90.1 FM of Porcupine have selected along with sportscasters, coaches and fans, the top girls and boys basketball athletes.
The list of girls All Stars was published in the May 3 issue.

MARTIN - Both Todd County and Red Cloud were knocking on the state tournament door this year but the experience and strength of Little Wound and St. Thomas More prevailed as the Mustangs downed the Falcons in the Region 7A final to return to state for the second year in a row while St. Thomas More proved to be too much for Red Cloud in the Region 8A final as the Cavaliers earned their fourth straight appearance in the State A tourney.

For the second time in the history of the Lakota Nation Invitational tournament, the two teams who played for the LNI championship in December returned three months later to play each other for the State A championship on the same floor. In December Little Wound knocked off St. Thomas More, the defending State A champs 49-46 to win the LNI championship, in March the Cavaliers stormed out to a 20-11 first quarter lead on their way to a 71-61 win over the Mustangs for their second straight State A championship. The loss to Little Wound in the LNI championship game proved to be St. Thomas More's only loss in two years. In December of 1989, Custer defeated Red Cloud in the LNI championship and three months later Custer defeated Red Cloud for the State A championship, both games on the Rushmore Plaza Civic Center arena floor in Rapid City.

For the second straight year, Red Cloud's fine season ended at the hands of St. Thomas More in the regional championship game.

The Crusaders finished up with a 19-4 record with all four losses coming at the hands of teams playing in state championship games. Their four losses included two to Little Wound and one to St. Thomas More, both teams playing in the South Dakota State A championship game and Chadron, Neb. who played in the Nebraska State B championship game. Red Cloud returns all five starters and eight of their top nine players for next year. Todd County peaked at the right time this year as the season approached the play-offs. The Falcons knocked off Platte in the District 13A finals, a team that had been ranked in the top ten all year and lost to Little Wound in the regions; they return a solid nucleus built around Gunner Krogman and Jordan His Law to be a force next year.

TJ McCauley

Wearing his third different team jersey in three years, TJ McCauley earns his third straight first team selection to the Indian Country All Stars team as he helped to lead the Little Wound Mustangs to the runner-up trophy in this year's South Dakota State A tournament. McCauley, like he did when he came to Lower Brule as a sophomore and Pierre as a junior, fit into the Mustang lineup as if he had been playing for Little Wound all four years. TJ led the Mustangs in scoring, averaging over 21 points per game, leading the team in steals and providing a consistent effort each game that helped lead Little Wound to a season record of 24-2. McCauley has signed a national letter of intent to play basketball for Bismarck State College this fall.

Brice Hornbeck

Brice Hornbeck, a junior point guard, was the heart and soul of the Little Wound Mustangs and earns his second straight first team all star honor. On both defense and on offense, Hornbeck played 115 per cent, providing a key steal or stop on defense or at a much needed time, driving the lane for a score or coming up with an offensive rebound. Hornbeck was the second leading rebounder for the team, shared the steal leadership and was the assist leader for the team. Next year, Little Wound will be very competitive because the team will be built around Brice Hornbeck, his leadership and energy will make them a formidable opponent for any team that has the Mustangs on their schedule.

Rich Big Boy

Rich Big Boy, a 6'2" center, dominated the paint against every team Little Wound played. In the Lakota Nation championship game against St. Thomas More, Rich scored 22 points on a much taller, 6'7" Kyle Doerr. In game after game, Big Boy played much larger than his size and out rebounding most of his opponents. Big Boy led the Mustangs in rebounding and averaged 16 points a game leading the Mustangs to the runner-up trophy and the LNI championship. Big Boy joins McCauley in signing with Bismarck State for the 2007/2008 school year.

Christian McGhee

Christian McGhee is a junior point guard for the Red Cloud Crusaders and led his team in scoring and in assists. His consistency and floor leadership helped the Crusaders to a 19-4 record and the Region 8A championship game. He is the hardest worker on his team and has been the team captain since the beginning of his sophomore year. As a sophomore, the team had six losses, as a junior the team finished with four losses and as he looks forward to his senior year he is looking at no losses and he is ready to back that up with a tremendous work ethic.

Kyal Middletent

Kyal Middletent and his twin brother have led Lower Brule on the floor and in the school, both are planning to attend Dakota Wesleyan nest year, both will play football and Kyal will play basketball as well. Kyal played like a whirling dervish this year, giving everything he had every game and them some. The Middletents helped to lead Lower Brule to a 14-6 regular season record; they lost to James Valley Christian in the District 5B semis.

Second team honors go to Eric Archambault/McLaughlin, Colton Douville/Chamberlain, Gunner Krogman/Todd County, JJ Arcoren/St. Francis and Lester Gotheridge/Red Cloud.

Third team selections honored Tyson Maxon and Chase Pay Pay/Cheyenne Eagle Butte, Shilo Pierce/Little Wound, John Provost/Pine Ridge and Tanner Wince/St. Thomas More.

Honorable mention nods go to Larry Gayton and Ryan Barker/Crow Creek, Arthur Vitalis, Billy Scott and Dave Giago/Red Cloud, Devon LeBeau and Ty Lunderman/Little Wound, Taylor Brushbreaker and Travis Spotted war Bonnett/St. Francis, Mike Jack/Pine Ridge, Derrick Locke/Tiospa Zina, Tali Fast Wolf and RJ LeBeau/Tiospaye Topa, Kansas Middletent/Lower Brule, Craig Dreamer/Oelrichs, Sam Mendoza/Takini, Ron Rousseau and Cory Straighthead/Cheyenne Eagle butte and Jordan His Law, Steve Antoine and Vernie Menard/Todd County.

Outstanding newcomers include Brier Iron Cloud and Carl Swallow/Red Cloud, Orin Three Stars/Little Wound and Alex Prue/Todd County.

Many thanks to the coaches, followers and media representatives who helped put the all star teams together for the third annual 2007 Lakota Country Times/KILI Radio Indian Country Boy's Basketball All Star Teams.

Red Cloud's Ross top local finisher in State A golf in Madison

Todd County, Red Cloud, Little Wound golfers compete

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

MADISON - The 2007 State A golf meet took place Monday and Tuesday in Madison with Red Cloud's Shelby Ross leading the way scoring a 103 the first day and a 95 the second day for a 198 total and a tie for 27th place.

Abby Feehan of Dell Rapids won the individual title with a 159 beating out the two time defending champ, Tara Hofer of Lead-Deadwood who had a 165. Lead-Deadwood won the team title for a record tying fourth time in a row with a 690 total, beating West Central by 55 strokes; Aberdeen Roncalli was third and Vermillion was fourth.

Bobbi and Jacqui White from Red Cloud tied for 36th with a 207. Todd County's Shauna Gentry tied for 40th with a 208 and her teammate Christine Crow Eagle finished in a tie for 46th with a 211. Little Wound's Alyssa Whirlwind Horse finished with 113 both days for a 226 total and a tie for 62nd.

"Once again, I am very proud of our team," said Wendell Gehman, Red Cloud golf coach, "they continue to compete well and qualify for state even though our nearest golf course is 28 miles away and the one we practice on is over 40 miles away. Next year we want to be competitive in the team competition, we have some young girls and we hope they play all summer."

Sam Mendoza of Takini finished with 88 the first day and an 89 the second day for a 177 total and a tie for 43rd at the State B golf tournament at the Hillcrest Country Club in Yankton while his brother Kiko Mendoza shot a 95 and a 101 for 196 and a tie for 90th.

Matt Erickson of Dell Rapids St. Marys won the State b with a 147, Lance Relf of Colman-Egan was runner-up with a 157 while Sioux Falls Christian wan the B team title with a 487 team total followed by Dell Rapids St. Marys with a 504 total.

Shelby Ross tied 27th place for state golf.

Talley picked for CHS principal

RAPID CITY (AP)) -South Dakota's largest high school will be led by its first American Indian principal if the school board approves the district's pick.

Mike Talley, 34, of Bismarck, N.D., was offered the position at Rapid City Central High School.

Talley's wife, Jackie Maxon-Talley, 37, was offered an assistant principal job at Southwest Middle School, said Superintendent Peter Wharton, who said they're both experienced administrators who will contribute to the community and school district.

``The two of them will bring a perspective and leadership that is so essential in making connections with not only the Native American community, but with all students and their families," he said.

Central's large Indian student population was one of the attractions, Talley said.

``I feel I can make an impact on that particular group of students and the parents and families as well," he said.

Talley, an enrolled member of the Standing Rock Sioux Tribe, grew up in McLaughlin, as did his wife. He finished his undergraduate and graduate education in administration at the University of Mary in Bismarck.

For the last seven years Talley has been principal of Standing Rock Community Grant High School at Fort Yates, N.D.

The school board will act on Wharton's recommendation at its June 7 meeting.

Little Wound School promotes community events

KYLE - During this last week, three events took place at Little Wound School involving students and community.

On May 17, a flower making workshop was coordinated by Louise Big Boy and DeVonna Bush at the auditorium. More than 30 people attended the workshop that involved making crepe paper flowers. A light meal was served with door prizes given out.

"Crepe paper flower making is a craft that dates back to the early 1900s", said Bush.

Crepe paper, wire and pipe cleaners were used to create elaborate flowers from many designs. The finished flower was sometimes dipped in wax to make the flower lasting.

Crepe paper flowers was a popular art form back before the factories could mass produce plastic or silk flowers, which are now more affordable.

This event was part of Family Literacy nights and another literacy night will be held May 24 for flower completions. May 24 will be the last family literacy night for the school year.

Crepe paper flowers were made and placed on the graves of loved ones during Memorial Day.

This craft is still done by some families and the workshop was attended by community members who enjoyed making roses, lilacs and other flowers.

On Friday, May 18, Can Wigmunke and Oglala Lakota College's department of math and science and department of agriculture and natural resources and Little Wound Elementary's Learning to Read program sponsored a Tree Planting and Care workshop at the school auditorium.

The presenters were Patricia Hammond, Jason Schacht and Benny Rosales. The trees that were given to the participants canp'hu, mastin'ca pute, kan'tah can, hante, cansasa, wazican. The workshop ended with healthy snacks.

On May 15, the elementary school sponsored a career writing contest, which was sponsored by Learning to Read program with Reva High Horse and Juanita Witt, prevention counselor.

In grades K-2, first place was Richard Rosales with a gift card; second place-was Rosemary and third Felicia, both received gift cards from Kyle Grocery.

In grades 3-5, first place was Michael Smith, with a gift card; second place Rikki Randall and third place Jeremy Red Owl both receiving Kyle Grocery cards.

The classes with the most entries were Eunice LeValdo's, Grady Brunsch' fifth grade and Phyllis Heathershaw's fourth grade, all receiving gift cards.

For 21 years Sicangu elders meet for fun and games

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ST. FRANCIS - The weather was perfect on the Rosebud reservation as people continued to trickle in as the 21st Sicangu Elder Olympics slowly got off the ground in a very relaxed way. The St. Francis Indian School "old track" was the site of the elder games last Saturday co-sponsored by the RST Nutrition and Elderly Care Programs and the Diabetes Prevention Program.

Sharon Swift, lead advocate of the Elderly Care program had to be pleased with the turn out as an estimated 70 or more people came out to support the elders, while others came to volunteer their time and energy. Marty Makes Room and Ned Metcalf did a great job in announcing the event all day as they were quite humorous at times and kept things moving. Sharon noted that she was little worried about the heat, but in the end the day went well.

While things slowly got started after 11:00 a.m. a couple hours late, Ruth Thomas, physician's assistant at the Rosebud I.H.S. hospital could be heard saying, "On the Rosebud it's hard to be late at anything." It was a great sentiment as it reflected the mood of the day as many of the elders were seated in the shade or behind the registration table which had some very attractive tee shirts. Thomas was giving out a brochure on a Wednesday elder's clinic being held at the Rosebud Hospital and she noted that she is finally doing some work that she greatly enjoys with the elders.

Elders such as Bertha Shaw of Antelope, Chris Scissons of the Rosebud senior center, Christine Dunham of Black Pipe and Loretta Hollow Horn Bear were just a few of the Sicangu elders in attendance.

The morning schedule began with the RST flag and the American flag tied to freshly cut poles being raised "Iwo Jima" style by veterans, Homer Whirlwind Soldier, Roy Spotted War Bonnett, Victor Left Hand Bull, Harvey Jordan, Curtis and Archie Beauvais. Ned Metcalf announced the flag raising with appropriate comments of the sacrifice veterans

Please turn to Elders: B2

Former RST council representative from Black Pipe, Christine Dunham, was assisted by her granddaughter a quarter of a mile during the 2007 Sicangu Elder Olympics held at the old track on the campus of St. Francis Indian School on May 19.

Veterans Stand Down at Pine Ridge on June 7

PINE RIDGE - The VA Black Hills Health Care System and the Rapid City Vet Center are holding a Veterans Stand Down on Thursday, June 7, 10:00 am - 5:00 pm at the Billy Mills Hall in Pine Ridge, South Dakota.

The June 7 Stand Down, according to Connie Moffitt, Minority Veterans Program Coordinator at VA Black Hills, is intended to serve homeless and needy veterans from the Pine Ridge Reservation. There is no charge for any of the services. "It is a hand up, rather than a hand out, extended by a caring community," said Moffitt.

Stand Down is a military term used to describe brief periods of rest and recovery that were provided to battle-fatigued troops who were periodically removed from the field of fire to a place of relative safety and calm.

Basic health services will be provided, including blood sugar testing and blood pressure screening. A variety of personal care items will be available to anyone wishing a hand up, and a complimentary noon meal will be served to all veterans.

VA Black Hills and Vet Center staff will be available to hear issues, answer questions, and provide information on VA benefits, programs and health care enrollment opportunities. Included will be information specific to Agent Orange, Gulf War and Operation Enduring Freedom and Operation Iraqi Freedom. Representatives from the Social Security Administration and South Dakota Job Service will also be in attendance to provide information and assistance to Stand Down participants.

Veterans will also be able to make future health care appointments at VA Black Hills. Veterans who have not previously enrolled with the VA are requested to bring a copy of their military discharge papers, DD 214, to the June 7 Stand Down.

Veterans needing transportation to the Stand Down can contact their local CAP office.

For more information about the Stand Down at Pine Ridge, contact Connie Moffitt at (605) 745-2000 Ext. 9-2164 or Leon Adams at (605) 867-1009.

Sicangu elders games

have made, while the Kiyukanpi drum sang the flag song. Another drum group, Lecal Wakan was also on board.

Meanwhile, RST President, Rodney M. Bordeaux, welcomed the elders with greetings and a supportive message about the need for all of us to remain active and healthy.

To kick off the physical activity portion of the elders games, Ned asked everyone present to get up and walk together at least once around the track. Christine Dunham said, "I haven't walked that far in 50 years" as she chucked and said, "Not that long ago." Mr. McGhee of Ft. Thompson on the Crow Creek Sioux reservation was a first time visitor to the Rosebud and the Sicangu Elder Games and said he was delighted to be present. He said he had made it a practice to travel informally to other elder games and was hoping to go to a state sponsored elder games in Mitchell this summer. At 64, the bus driver was in very good shape as he easily won the 100 meter and 200 meter dashes. He should have been paired up against some younger runners, perhaps.

There was plenty of water, Powerade, fruit bars and other snacks available to keep everyone properly hydrated and at the right blood sugar level. As the eyapaha kept everyone occasionally chuckling at their Lakota humor it was evident that there was a great respect for the elders as each speaker reaffirmed that sentiment.

Even Kerwin Eagleman of Two Strike, one of the younger elder, said "This is where I used to kick it in" as he walked by in cowboy boots and marked a spot on the track. He was referring to his high schools years when he was an all around athlete and enjoyed a good deal of success and popularity as a letter award winner.

Sharon said the elders had even greater fun as mid afternoon approached and a number of social games like the potato dance and tobacco rolling contest were the highlight of the day. As a matter of fact, the elders wanted to hold a powwow, but the school had allotted only a certain time slot for the Elder Olympics.

Middle school students take a look at underage drinking

KYLE - Little Wound Middle School students participated in Underage Drinking Awareness activities the last week in April.

Recently, a law was enacted nationally to stop under age drinking, which created a media campaign aimed at adults to stop underage drinking. This is important because most underage drinkers get alcohol from adults and most adults underestimate the problem of underage drinking. Drug and alcohol awareness weekly campaigns are promoted in junior high and high school in April and May when there are proms and graduation celebrations.

A contest was held in writing essays, designing posters and writing poetry and the following students placed in the contest.

The winners in the poster contest were:

First place winners: Chelsea Good Voice Flute, 8th grade; Marlina Garette, 7th grade and Denisha Janis, 6th grade.

Second place winners: Tashaum Long Soldier, 8th grade: Courtney Lamont and Brittany Has No Horse, 7th grade and Tara Iron Quill, 6th grade.

Third place winners: Joesph Rosales, 8th grade; Gabby Montileaux, 7th grade and Adam Poor Bear, 6th grade.

The following essays were selected as the best in 8th grade: First, Donna Shae Garnette, Second, Candace Wright and Third, Tyler Swallow.

Essays for 7th grade were First, Keith Martinez, Second, Brittany Has No Horses and Alanna Brown Bull and Third Amber Andrews.

Essay contest winners for 6th grade were First, Kelie Old Horse, Second, Pat Garrett and Third Erika Crow.

The poetry contest winners were First Inez Gake, Harley Ferguson and Jared Gay.

One day on April 24, 2007 there was a kid named named Mahpiya. He and his friend Ryan who was drinking on the side of Angles Store. Ryan said hey Mahpia do you have two dimes and a nickel. Mahpiya said Zee lil homie. Then the cops came over and arrested Ryan. Erika had a little mustache, said Mahpiya.

The next day Mahpiya was in the bank getting money for his monkey. His monkey's name is potatoe who drank a lot. Ryan was getting out of jail. Ryan called Mahpiya to pick him up. Danielle the judge told Ryan not to drink in public

Two years later Ryan and Christa got married. They didn't last long because Ryan drank a lot. Ryan stopped drinking because he lost his marriage. Christa found out he stopped drinking, but Christa didn't care. Mahpiya started drinking with his monkey because he thought the beer smelled good.

Kelcie went to the Army and married. Kelcie came back and found out all of her friends drank all the time. Only one took care of her life and that was Erika with the little mustache.

Everyday someone is drinking.

Today a lot of teens are falling into drinking habits. The causes of this are many teens begging them to party and many teens are there as well. I hope other teens go and ask teens that don't want to drink if they will drink with them. That's when our pressure starts because they keep asking and nagging at them to drink. Most teens fail to resist the nagging and start drinking as well.

A lot of teens get beer and beverages with alcohol in them from bootleggers. Some even got their drinks from relatives like aunts and uncles.

Many effects of underage drinking are addiction when older. It could cause many physical and mental problems. Some teens get drunk and start having sex. Some don't even know they are doing this. A lot of girl teens are having babies at this age. This makes it very difficult for the rest of their lives.

Underage drinking causes teen girls to have sex with older men and spreading a lot of STDS. Besides the law doesn't allow alcohol to be sold to teens so others need to stand firm and refuse to give alcohol to teens. That's why, for the sake of teens under peer pressure, stop drinking.

People drink when they are young because they think it is fun, but it's not. They think they are older because they drink, but when people drink underage that is what caused car wrecks, rapes and even early pregnancy.

Kids have babies when they are 14 or 15. Drinking just causes deaths. I'm sure more than 15,000 people have died of being a drunk driver or being killed by a drunk driver. Alcohol can make people do bad things; like, some people kill each other or themselves. I wonder why people drink when their young? When they can play basketball, softball, football. There are other kinds of things to do besides drinking or even doing drugs. That's what kids do, they say "friends don't let friends do drugs or drink" but they also do it right along with them.

Instead of doing drugs or drinking, I will play basketball or something else because being a drunk can cause cirrhosis and diabetes. Maybe you can drink like 2 or 3 cans a week and you won't get addicted.

Underage drinking stopped by having more activities and trips. It is good for parents to know where their child is at all times, so when I do somewhere, I let someone in my family know where I will be. I believe that underage drinking can be prevented.

I'm sitting here wondering where my life has gone. Thinking of the things I did wrong. My friends tell me to drink so I do, passing vodka from me to you.

My mind's still dizzy from the fifth drink not even getting a chance to think. Not knowing what to do, taking another drink maybe two.

I know there's no reason for a 14 year old to behave. Mixed in this crazy life it tends to put you on the block or locked up.

Giago's book, Children Left Behind, wins award

RAPID CITY - The book, Children Left Behind, about the Indian mission boarding schools, by Lakota journalist Tim Giago has won a Bronze Star from the Independent Publishers Book Awards in New York City.

Harmon Houton of Clear Light Book Publishing in Santa Fe, N.M., the publisher of the book said, "I knew we had a great book when we published it because the response has been so strong. I told Tim to get his acceptance speech ready because he will be accepting the award in New York City on June 1.

"I always believed that I could not let the sad story of the Indian mission boarding schools die on the vine. Too many Indian children paid the price in lost lives for the abuse they received at the hands of the missionaries and too many people have tried to sweep that sad fact under the carpet. I just was not going to let them do it," Giago said.

He added, "As a matter of fact, just as with any parts of the history of Indian education, I believe this book should be read by students of high school age all over this Nation. It would give them an idea of what their fathers, mothers and grandparents endured so that they could have the education they are now getting."

South Dakota Advocacy to hold listening session at Kyle June 11

KYLE - The South Dakota Advocacy Services will be hosting a public listening session and cookout for individuals with disabilities, their families, professionals and other interested people on Monday, June 11 at noon at the Our Lady of Sorrows Catholic church in Kyle.

If you are an individual with a disability, please note that this public session is being held in a physically accessible location and if other accommodations are needed contact this office at 1-800-658-4782.

The purpose of the session is to afford citizens in South Dakota the opportunity to provide input to help SDAS develop the future direction of the agency and the component programs.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I much admire your work and your sensitivity to those who come to you. As I have had a lot of changes in my life many that would have broken others maybe I keep keeping on. I work with many people helping them to heal wounds as I am just a helper of the Creator. Sometimes its nice to get a little help yourself in matters that are making life a little more challenging to say the least. I am a kind and loving woman and others have seemed to take this as a weakness and a license to abuse and use me. I have not always made the best choices but looking back they have always made me a stronger spirit/woman.

Please do not put this in the paper as I don't want others to know as this is a painful subject to me. And I am sure you get tired of having others ask you about there love life but this is what I am going to ask you any way so please bear with me.

I have loved this man for a long time now and we always seem to make our way back to one another after going thru some painful changes/separations. I pray daily I meditate . I honor and respect all things and try my best to be closer to the Creator by being loving and giving to others less fortunate than me.

The other is this man I love. He has an ex-wife and she is one of the major problems in our relationship. Am I an idiot to think that he wants me in his life?

Does he love me and intend to bring me into his life or will he always have "HER" in his life. Granted I got an EX also but I put him behind me a long time ago and wish him well.

Does he even give a darn about me or my feelings for him and does he return them.

Or to put it simply I am the "cheap date" he won't take home to his parents? Does he want this ex in his life or is he feeling like he wants her out of his life. I told him today I would not come near him or contact him as long as he wants to be attached to her as he has in the past. I am not a stupid person but I am feeling that way and very ashamed for loving someone who had no intention of a honest up front relationship. HELP.

Dear HELP:

I did put this in the paper but removed any information that could make your identity discovered. I know that your identity is safe because I know seven women personally that match this scenario.

First, on people taking advantage of you: Yes, many people perceive kindness as a weakness. Know that when they approach you in a way that is usurious you will "feel" it from them. That will allow you to pray for them but not allow them to hurt you.

They need healing more than anyone. It is always okay to say no to people. Remember, you are not a savior, you are a healer. There is a difference.

Secondly, on the man: Yes.

He does care for you. Concerning his ex: He has built in guilt and will continue the dance with his ex for many years to come.

Either decide that you can accept that or get out. He does have a "race" issue with you because he has felt all of his life very strongly about blood lines.

That is an okay way to be - but it does place you in a diminished role as a mate. Personally, I wouldn't want to be a "secret" lover of anyone. It just isn't comfortable.

We all tend to think that we should love "unconditionally." In the humanity way that is exactly the way to be.

Love people regardless of their proclivities, prejudices, problems, misunderstandings etc. However, in the practical role of a mate - we are not unconditional in our love. We do have conditions: faithfulness, loyalty, honesty, integrity, etc. Your relationship cannot survive for you in a good way because this man is not meeting the condition of sharing time with you and being proud to be with you. That shows a larger prejudice than love.

Release yourself from the bond. It may take quite a while, but I would ask you to look at him more honestly to decide who and what he really is.He lacks the strength of character to walk beside you in the light. Let him go.

Dear Anna,

I have a few questions. The first I wanted to know was I once saw you before and you said that I was going to meet the man I was going to be with, well I still haven't. Is it still to come? Do you think I set my standards too high? I feel like I try and do pretty good in the things that I do, but it gets frustrating, especially because I do want to meet someone who has good goals, and a good mind.

Do you see me settling down with anyone that I have already met? I sometimes think about this guy from the past, but he seems to not really be a one woman kind of guy.

The other question is about my career. I work with younger people and I really enjoy it, but there are other things that I want to do. What kind of career do you think I will be satisfied with?

Thanks, just want to get some clarity.

Getting impatient.

Dear Impatient:

If I saw him, then he is on his way. I feel like saying; yes, lower your standards.

What kind of a question is that? Should you settle for a bum because he is available instead of waiting for the right mate? Yes, most definitely. Desperation always will create a pleasant long lasting relationship, especially if you settle for someone that you don't respect enough to think of as great. What is going on with you?

Please let go of the unattractive energy of impatience and desperation. The right man will be there when his life is in order and when you lose the anxiousness involved in basing all of your sense of completion of self in this lifetime on a mate.

He will come into your life within the next couple of years - I promise you that.

Career wise: I see you involved in training and teaching people. Training involves more young adults and those restarting their lives after experiencing vast set-backs (such as prison), Keep working where you are until this opening develops. You will love it.

Dear Anna,

I've been in a relationship for more than 10 years and we have a family. Well my boyfriend has summer activities, which alcohol plays a major factor, but along with that comes other women and this seems to happen every summer.

I know I don't want to go through this again. I don't know if you can see our outlook for this summer, but is my man gonna mess around on me this summer? I don't know why I need to ask it usually happens.

I've already got the summertime blues and it isn't even here yet.

Hello there how are you doing? well me I'm doing okay and I'm writing to you to ask you a few question's and that is. am I going to have a good summer and not only me but my family too.

Will I leave for the military soon. I'm so excited to go but it is my skill's on my work that is holding me back from the service. well I go to go now...bye and take care..

Native 188

Dear Native 188:

Get going into the military. I see that as a great opportunity to let go of a stupid relationship that demeans your grace and the respect you deserve as a woman.

Let this guy go. It doesn't matter if you try to hold it together - because eventually, the two of you will separate permanently. You are correct about this summer.

Why suffer through it? It's is your choice because you can choose not to. Good Luck.

In Loving Memory of our Beautiful Baby Sister Arta Margaret Winters May 26, 1988 - October 30, 2006

Being able to see you grow from a cute baby into a beautiful young Woman is precious memories, thinking we wouldn't be sisters and Brothers if it wasn't for all we been through.

Every day that goes by we all think of you and how much you taught us in so little time, taught us to love, cherish, and respect each other even more.

Always making a big deal out of something so little. Remembering When you were little, you would just cry over anything and how excited You would get when you were happy about something.
Unknown we were going to have you for so little time "If we had known could we have made it better for you? Could we have loved you more dearly? Could we have given you more hugs and kisses or could we have told you we loved you everyday?"

Today it don't feel any different from when you left us, sometimes it feels unreal, we can't pick up the phone and call you or even see you. We only have memories of talking to you and seeing your beautiful face.

You are one of a kind, our beautiful baby sister. We love you very Much and are waiting to see your smiling face again.
So remember true
Beauty is what you are.
Love your sisters and brothers.

We thought we felt your touch today, in the breeze that rustled by, And then we heard the Angel say, "The spirit never dies",

We thought we saw our broken hearts in the crescent of the moon,And then we heard the Angel say, "The Lord is coming soon",

We thought that you left us for the stars so far above,And then we heard the Angel say "He left you with his love",

We thought we would miss you so, and never find our way, And then we heard the Angel say, "He is with you every day, the sun, the wind, the moon, the stars will Forever be around, reminding us of the love we shared and the peace he Finally found.

IHS to replace Sioux San hospital with new health care center

By Vicky Wicks
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY - Indian Health Services plans to replace Sioux San Hospital with a new health care center, eliminating inpatient and emergency services and demolishing a number of historic buildings.

But changes are years away, according to IHS officials.

Lorraine Jewett, chief executive officer at Sioux San, said securing funding for the project will require an act of Congress, and federal funds are tight right now.

Before making changes at health facilities, IHS has to give Congress a one-year notice, and that process has not begun, according to Tony Peterson, public information officer at IHS regional headquarters in Aberdeen.

Left: Present day Sioux San Hospital in Rapid City. Right: Sioux San in 1939, from a postcard photo. The Indian Health Service is planning a new health care facility for Sioux San. At issue are the buildings, which have historical value. There are two plans to address the need for an improved facility.

Sioux San was singled out in 1992, when an IHS review identified it as a facility requiring further scrutiny.

Last September, IHS approved an 82-page Program Justification Document, and earlier this spring IHS officials met with tribal leaders and others to discuss the project, according to Allen Davis, public information officer with IHS in Aberdeen.

The proposal outlines two alternative plans for construction at Sioux San's current location at 3200 Canyon Lake Drive.

The first alternative, preferred by IHS for its efficiency in energy use and delivery of services, is to demolish 16 buildings, including the main hospital building, so that all services can be contained in one new building measuring approximately 140,000 square feet.

The second alternative calls for gutting and renovating the existing hospital and dental clinic and constructing a smaller new facility. This plan would involve demoli-

RST motions to amend constitution of SFIS

Board of education members to be expanded

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - In a marathon session lasting at least twelve hours on Tuesday, the Rosebud Sioux tribal council listened to a presentation by the St. Francis Indian School in response to a list of concerns initiated by the RST education committee. RST then unanimously passed resolution number 07-126 which amends the charter of Sicangu Oyate Ho, Inc.

The RST council had suspended the charter of SFIS earlier in the month and the special session was intended to allow public comment also.

The resulting motion passed by the RST council expands the number of school board members to seven from five members who are enrolled members of the Rosebud Sioux tribe and requires elections no later than July 19. One member will be a student representative and one a staff member. Furthermore, a review board will be appointed to assist the board of education in setting up the election process.

The morning session appeared to revolve around the role of the board of education at SFIS and its relationship with the school's Superintendent Larry Parker. Also, there appeared to be a need to increase the flow of information between the tribe and SFIS. Apparently, the tribal education code has not been fully adopted by the RST council and its resulting passage may serve to alleviate some of the contentious issues in the future. Antelope council representative, Robert Moore, said, "The issues should be answered by the board. Communication has broken down. Our relationship is with the board."

Other major points of discussion revolved around the school's Adequate Yearly Progress status under the No Child Left Behind, questions about a $1 million dollar unallowable investment, the school's adherence to state accountability standards under NCLB and the tribe's sovereign status, tensions between the RST education department and SFIS, a concern about teachers not teaching in their area of expertise, special education, board travel and Indian preference. The school's current designation under AYP is pending with the BIA.

Furthermore, there was concern that too many amendments to the by-laws are being passed by the SOH Corporation without RST council approval. There was also a need to have more parental input and an airing of their concerns.

Finally, there was concern about proper administrative oversight of the Rosebud Alternative program, as well as concern about the need to complete background checks on all employees.

SFIS provided a point by point rebuttal to each of the concerns and all in all, the bottom line is a concern that Sicangu children receive a quality education.

Hotel won't be ready for Prairie Wind casino grand opening

By Tom Crash

PINE RIDGE - "The bottom line is that we need a building that we can live with, one that will last for many years and will not crumble," said Cora Whiting, council representative from Medicine Root District, "we were getting some pressure from some employees of Shakopee Mdewankanton Sioux Community to sign the 'Certificate of Substantial Completion' but after meeting with SMSC last week they told us it is our building and it is up to us to decide when we are ready to accept it."

The tribal council, during a special session in the old casino building on May 15, refused to consider approving a certificate of substantial completion from Peska Construction on tion of 17 properties and would divide services into different locations.

The cost difference between the two alternatives is not significant, according to the proposal.

An initial project cost estimate in October 2005 was just under $57 million; a later estimate was $67.16 million.

Jewett said the congressional process for funding design and construction could take a few years.

If funded, the project timelines from design to completion would be about four years, according to the proposal.

The land and some of the buildings at Sioux San were part of Rapid City Indian School, which opened in 1898 and closed in 1933. The school's main building burned down and was replaced with the current hospital, which was built in 1939 as Sioux Sanatorium, to treat patients with tuberculosis.

On the 42-acre campus, 19 properties are eligible for registration as National Historic Places, and the site is eligible to be a historic district. Under either of the alternative plans for renovation, most of the historic buildings would be demolished.

Because the federal project proposes altering a historic district, IHS has to satisfy requirements of the National Historic Preservation Act. As a first step, IHS contracted with Van Citters: Historic Preservation LLC of Albuquerque, and William Dodge toured the facilities on May 8-9, 2006.

Dodge noted that the hospital, built in 1939, is "a well-known landmark in the community."

"Its demolition would arguably be the most controversial, not only for its sense of history, but because…it is still structurally sound and a viable candidate for renovation," he said in his report.

To make that determination, Dodge relied on an evaluation and report completed by IHS's Division of Engineering Services.

Before demolishing historic buildings, IHS must take certain steps to satisfy requirements of the National Historic Preservation Act, including identifying adverse effects of the project on the historic district, justifying demolition over preservation, and offering mitigation if demolition is the best option.

The federal agency also has to consult with the appropriate historic preservation officers and tribes who might have cultural or religious ties to the property.

IHS officials met April 19 in Pierre with Chairman John Yellow Bird Steele of Oglala Lakota Tribe and Chairman Joseph Brings Plenty from Cheyenne River, along with representatives of the South Dakota Governor's Office and South Dakota's three congressional offices, Peterson said.

Tribal leaders want to "make sure they're all on the same page" and then have public meetings, Peterson said.

Although Peterson said Sioux San is located on Indian land, South Dakota's State Historic Preservation Office has become involved in the process because the land lies outside reservation boundaries, according to Kate Divis, restoration specialist with SHPO.

Divis said IHS and the state don't yet have a formal agreement. "At this point, we are working with IHS to develop a Memorandum of Agreement to avoid, minimize, or mitigate the adverse effects," she said.

Part of the project cost is $500,000 to address adverse effects. Those measures "have yet to be formally determined," Divis said, but the IHS program justification outlines a proposal to document and archive the history of the Indian School and

Donovin Sprague, local historian, professor, and author, gave a presentation on the history of the Rapid City Indian School on May 15 at the Dahl Arts Center and said he is concerned that there might be gravesites on Sioux San's land,

Sioux Sanatorium, to collect an oral history from people involved with those institutions, and to create a pictorial display for the lobby in the new building.

Donovin Sprague, local historian, professor, and author, gave a presentation on the history of the Rapid City Indian School on May 15 at the Dahl Arts Center and said he is concerned that there might be gravesites on Sioux San's land.

Although graves aren't documented on any maps or blueprints, he said, Native elders and former Sioux San employees tell of people, possibly students of the Indian school, buried on the campus. "In the old days, they were just buried," Sprague said.

If there are graves onsite that would be disturbed by construction, the Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act would require that remains be returned to descendants or tribes, Sprague said.

In planning Sioux San's future, IHS assessed healthcare needs of the Native population served by the facility (projected at 13,657 by 2015) and the ability of Sioux San to provide those needs. One consideration in that evaluation was the proximity of other health care facilities that could provide contractual services to replace those eliminated at Sioux San.

That assessment resulted in the decision to eliminate emergency services and inpatient care, which Jewett said currently consists of 32 beds, nine of which are designated for mental health care. To offset the reduction in services, Sioux San will extend its evening and weekend clinic hours and request additional funds to contract with other healthcare providers, Jewett said.

Direct services at Sioux San are available to members of any federally recognized tribe, but contractual services are limited to Native people living in Pennington County, Jewett said. If patients residing outside the county need contractual care, Sioux San works with their home reservations to secure it.

Tim Sughrue, CEO of Rapid City Regional Hospital, said Regional took part in a meeting at some point where the future of Sioux San was at issue.

Sughrue said Sioux San's prospective transformation parallels one at Ellsworth Air Force Base "a number of years ago," when obstetrical and emergency medical care was eliminated in favor of increased emphasis on clinical care.

"Efficiencies and economies come from higher volumes" of patients, Sughrue said. To have emergency and surgical services with physicians and nurses on duty at all times is "a considerable investment."

"They [at Sioux San] have to consider, how do they best use their scarce resources?" he said.

Regional, with 417 beds, has the capacity to handle any additional patients from Sioux San, Sughrue said. "We're here; the light's on."

Hotel

the new casino and hotel. Structural questions on the new hotel continued to plague the formal completion of the overall project.

The council took a number of steps including passing unanimously 16-0 resolutions to hire a geotechnical engineer and structural engineer to evaluate the construction testing reports of American Testing Services and to inspect the hotel to determine the fill and foundation beneath the hotel and the drainage system installed and retaining a mechanical, electrical and plumbing engineer to evaluate the MEP work performed on the project and in particular the electrical wiring and fire protection systems.

"Our hope was that the reports would be done in time to be reviewed by the council during their special session on May 31," said Whiting, "but the reports are not completed and the council meetings for both May 31 and June 6 have been pushed back on the schedule."

Even if the reports had been done and the council had signed off on the "Certificate of Substantial Completion" on May 31 there would not be enough time to get the hotel ready for the casino grand opening scheduled for June 14-16, according to Michael Graham, casino general manager.

"We are going to need time to clean the facility, set up the office, install the phone system, put all of the various items in the rooms like towels and soap and such and test out the electrical lines and all of the water outlets and plumbing through the facility," said Graham, "until that certificate is signed off on, we are not allowed access to the hotel to make preparations for any opening - when we are able to get in we will get it ready and have a separated opening for the hotel."

When asked about what it will take to make the hotel profitable, Graham said that the Innovation Group in their early marketing and analysis work had put up the figure of needing somewhere between 43 and 46 per cent occupancy to break even and show some profit.

"My concern and hope is that the hotel gets up and operating and brings in enough to cover our expenses and operating costs and hopefully enough to cover it's share of the loan payment," said Graham.

When the project first started, the economic and business development committee hired Ellis Gaming out of Las Vegas to develop a job description for a hotel manager. Graham took that job description and used it to advertise for the position in February of 2006. Graham filled the position and it didn't work out so he advertised again and hired both a hotel manager and an assistant manager which the committee suggested, Nellie Bald Eagle as the manager and Wilson Two Lance as the assistant.

Gary Gladstone has been providing training for both the manager and assistant manager and there is software in place to do room rentals and the Lodgenet contract is now in place as well, just no hotel to get ready to open, added Graham.

"You cannot make up for lost revenue, there is no way around that, we just want to be able to get the facility ready as soon as possible for our regular customers and any new ones attracted by the new facility," said Graham.

Between Lodges, Shortbull lead Pine Ridge's hosting of Native American ceremonies at Black Hills National Cemetery

STURGIS - "My mother and father are buried here at the Black Hills National Cemetery," said Wilbur Between Lodges, past Oglala Sioux Tribal president, "as well as many of our fallen men and women who made the supreme sacrifice for our nation." Between Lodges was the master of ceremonies Monday at the Native American ceremonies at the Black Hills National Cemetery outside of Sturgis.

Wakpamni Singers shared a Lakota Flag Song and a victory song as veterans from across Pine Ridge Reservation marched to the front led by Legion Post 269 from Wanblee and escorted by the Wild Horse Butte Tokalas from Martin. Delbert Tail, Jr., Post 294 commander, gave the invocation and Shorty Brewer, OST vice president and Ted Twiss, tribal veteran service officer gave welcome addresses.

"As Lakota people we value military service," said Tom Shortbull, Oglala Lakota College president, "I am very honored to be asked to speak here today even though I did not serve in the military, family members from both my family and my wife's family served honorably - my wife's grandfather, Francis Janis served with the Mexican Border Volunteers; even though we weren't citizens of this country in 1917 they stopped in Flandreau and asked for volunteers and Janis went.

Between 200 and 300 men, women and children attended the ceremony on the edge of the Black Hills south of Sturgis. Kierra Lopez, Post 281 and Keylee Jo Reddest, Post 317 laid memorial wreaths, William Center of Rapid City did a pipe ceremony and Reggie Little Killer of Post 265 played taps.

"We love this country, we love what it stands for, its core values of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness and we have been willing to fight for this country and we will continue to do so," said Shortbull, "yet we have an obligation to continue to work to make this a great country and an obligation to the many who have sacrificed their lives for this country - there have been many wrongs from the hangings at Mankato to the massacre at Wounded Knee and the taking of the Black Hills but we have opportunities to make change in this country and we need to work at it."

Shortbull announced that the college was dedicating a new veteran's memorial on June 23 as part of the college's graduation activities, a memorial wall honoring over 1,600 men and women who served in World War I and II, Korea and Vietnam. Those serving in the more recent conflicts will be added at a later date.

"We invite all of you to attend the dedication of the memorial and to honor this year's college graduates," concluded Shortbull.

OST to break ground for new transit system facility June 1

PINE RIDGE - The Oglala Sioux Tribe Department of Transportation's Transit program is beginning the development of the Transit System by conducting a ground breaking ceremony on June 1 at 11 a.m., one mile east of Pine Ridge on U.S. highway 18 at the old road shop compound.

The transportation department has been working for the past five years to establish the ground work for the construction of the transit facility and development of transit services on the Pine Ridge reservation. Funding of $3.5 million came from the U.S. Department of Transportation's Federal Transit Administration and the tribes road's program. The transit system will employ 18 people when fully operational.

Services are projected to begin in March of 2008. Emma Featherman-Sam, said the entire South Dakota congressional delegation has been instrumental in securing the necessary funding to make the transit a reality for residents of the Pine Ridge reservation.

Aside from the 22,500 square feet transit facility, they will purchase four (22 passenger) buses and five (16 passenger) vans. The proposed routes are main line: Wanblee/Kyle, Sharps Corner/Porcupine, Wounded Knee to Pine Ridge to Oglala and Prairie Winds. Fares for riding the buses range from $10 to $1.

Transit program employees are Emma Featherman-Sam, coordinator and Renita Quick Bear, office manager and plans to hire transit liaison, bus drivers, two dispatchers and a bus mechnanic.

SDSU men's coach plans basketball camp at Red Cloud on June 13, 14

PINE RIDGE - South Dakota State University is coming to town on Wednesday and Thursday, June 13th and 14th for a basketball camp at Red Cloud High School. The two day camp features SDSU head men's basketball coach, Scott Nagy, assistant coach Deryl Cunningham and SDSU players Blake Yackley, Mohamed Berte and Red Cloud graduate, Mackenzie Casey.

The two day camp features individual basketball skill instruction for boys and girls K-8 each afternoon from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. and for boys and girls 9-12 from 6-9 p.m. each evening. In addition to the basketball skill instruction, each participant will receive a t-shirt. Cost of the camp is $20.00 per participant.

The all-time leader of men's basketball coaching victories, Scott Nagy just completed his 12th season as head men's coach at South Dakota State University, the school's third year at the NCAA Division I level, compiling an overall record of 235 wins and 121 losses. With five North Central Conference championships, Nagy has been named conference coach of the year five times.

"We're looking at a fun camp with good fundamental skill instruction for all levels," said Deryl Cunningham, SDSU assistant coach, "this will be a chance to get a part of SDSU out to another part of the state and in particular a part of the state where one of our players is from, Mackenzie Casey."

For information on the camp contact Matt Rama at 441-3823 or Tom Casey at 867-5006 or 685-5533.

Who was Dr. Charles Eastman?

Wounded Knee Indian doctor's voice might finally be heard

By Nick Coleman
Reprinted from the Minneapolis Star Tribune

Dr. Charles Eastman

HBO's take on one of the most notorious massacres in American history, the 1890 slaughter by the 7th Cavalry of 300 Lakota Indians on a snow-covered South Dakota knoll above a creek known as Wounded Knee, begins airing at 8 Sunday night. The film is called "Bury My Heart at Wounded Knee." The title comes from the late Dee Brown's 1970 polemic about centuries of genocide against American Indians. One of the film's main characters is a fascinating Minnesotan, a college-educated Indian physician and influential native author named Charles Eastman. His life was lived in a turbulent effort to mediate the conflict between Indian tribes and a white government determined to either take Indian lands and pressure the tribes into adopting white culture, or to take the lands and destroy the Indians.

A lot of government officials believed the second plan was easier.

Eastman was a Dakota (eastern bands of the "Sioux" spoke Dakota, western bands spoke a variant known as Lakota) who was born near present-day Redwood Falls in 1858, the year Minnesota became a state. He was just a child when his family fled to Canada after the 1862 Dakota war on the Minnesota frontier, barely escaping a punitive military expedition.

Eastman's life spanned the decades-long war between the government and the Sioux, from its bloody origins here to its gruesome conclusion at Wounded Knee, where Eastman was serving as the reservation doctor. It wasn't just the members of Chief Big Foot's band who died in the bloody snow at Wounded Knee. It was the dream of people like Eastman that the long war between the government and the Indians could end without Indian culture being brutally crushed.

Educated at Dartmouth and trained as a doctor at Boston University, Eastman was unable to get a medical practice off the ground in St. Paul. White people, he discovered, didn't want an Indian doctor. He was practicing on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation at the time of Wounded Knee, when the Army paid back the Sioux (so the Indians believed) for their victory 14 years earlier over Gen. George Armstrong Custer at the Little Big Horn.

After the massacre, Eastman helped search for the wounded and recover the slain - who included women and children. It was an event that traumatized him for the rest of his life, and affected his teaching and writing, including the books "Indian Boyhood,"The Soul of The Indian" and "From the Deep Woods to Civilization."

David Martinez, an assistant professor of American Indian studies at the University of Minnesota, who is writing a book about Eastman, says Eastman "accepted the idea that pre-reservation life was gone, and that Indians had to adapt in order to live in America."

But acceptance didn't make it any easier.

"Indians like Eastman were living under extremely difficult circumstances," says Martinez, whose book, due out next year from MHS Press, is called "From The Land of the Sky Blue Water: Charles A. Eastman, Minnesota and the World of the American Indian."Each decision they made was made with fear and trembling," he said. "There was no way to know whether it was the right thing to do."

By the time of his death in 1939 - with native religions outlawed, native languages dying and the country suffering from environmental degradation and economic depression -- Eastman worried that the loss of Indian spirituality and cultural values was not just causing suffering on reservations. The majority white culture was suffering as well.

Eastman is portrayed in the HBO film by Adam Beach, "Bury My Heart at Wounded Knee.

Eastman's boyhood Dakota name, Ohiyesa, meant "the winner." His father, a warrior named Many Lightnings, was imprisoned for several years after the 1862 war. When he was released, he changed his name to Jacob Eastman and decided that young Ohiyesa should become Charles Eastman. He arranged for his bright young son to get a good education.

He got one, in more ways than his father might have imagined.

One hundred seventeen years after Wounded Knee, Charles Eastman still speaks to America. Perhaps now, we are ready to listen.

Words from the 'trenches'

Every Day is Memorial Day

Connie Smith-Blanco

Everyone has the freedom to celebrate Memorial Day in their own way. On one hand it's a holiday connected to a three day week-end and possibly a mini vacation spent on the road or at home. On the other hand it's also a solemn occasion that is spent visiting the gravesites of loved ones whose lives were lost during or after defending our country.

Memorial Day can also be spent visiting the graves of loved ones lost to sickness, drunken driving, drug overdose, accidents, murder, and natural causes. The loss still feels the same and it hurts to know a loved one is never coming back, at least not in this lifetime.

As humans, we are free to celebrate a departed loved one's life in any manner that is law abiding. And because we are human, our method of celebration is as varied as the color of our eyes and skin and the strength of our religious preference. Anything goes in our society today and that is especially true in our personal preferences for celebrating and honoring Memorial Day.

In America we have something for everyone. You can celebrate with the Veterans and attend flag raising ceremonies with patriotic music and hymns. You can visit family grave sites and leave flowers or gifts or messages of love or mow around the headstone. You can have a big family cook-out and invite your large family or your small family, or no family at all. You can cherish family memories as you sit in your yard or as you work in your yard or as you toil in your garden.

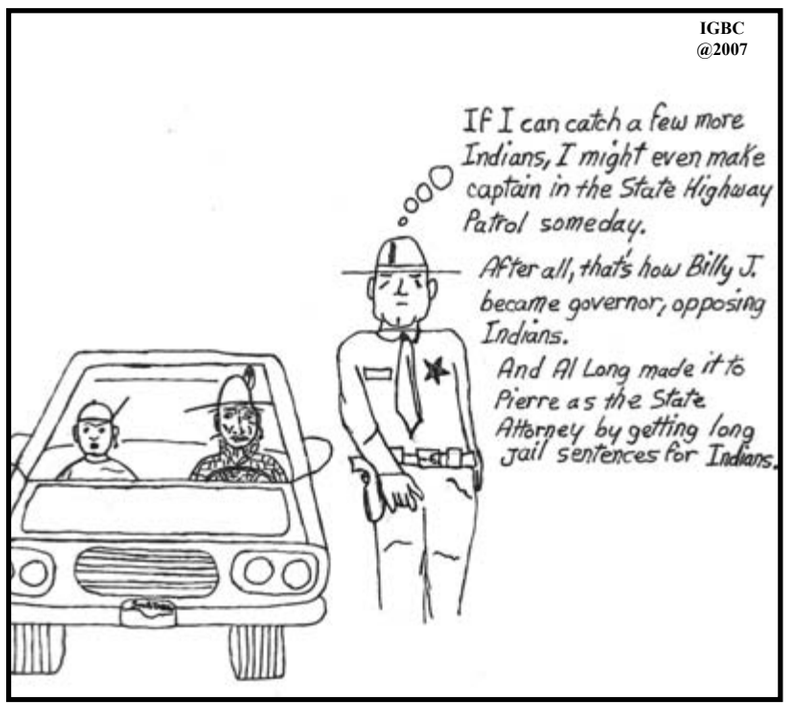
I think that's what our Veterans fought for, the freedom to live life as best as we can and as comfortable as we can. This year I might visit my brother Troy in the veterans cemetery in Sturgis. No he didn't die fighting at 17 years old when he went to the Vietnam war. He died fighting the war within himself, the war that came home with him when he finally left the Vietnam War.

Next year on Memorial Day, I might visit Great Grandma and Grandpa Allen, Grandma Viola and Grandpa DeCleo Smith, or Uncle Dick Howe. In America we have the freedom to choose how, when and where to memorialize family members whether they were Veterans or non-veterans.

This year I was questioned about my Memorial Day plans and the lack of cemetery visitation. I tried to explain myself but the words didn't come out right. I simply muttered that cemeteries made me feel uncomfortable and with that, the discussion moved on to other topics.

The Veterans resting in our cemeteries each came from different backgrounds, different families, different traditions and certainly different ways of celebrating and honoring their own family's Memorial Day holiday. Those same veterans fought for our right to honor and celebrate death and life as best we can.

Maybe that's why I rarely go to the cemetery. When I'm there all I can think about is sadness and death. What I want to think about is life. I want to think about my loved one's life and the memories I have of them 'before' their journey to the spirit world. It's very hard to do that while looking at a cold, hard headstone, but I'll keep trying.



If you truly loved and honored that person in life, then Memorial Day is every day. I can think about my brother and other veterans without driving over a 100 miles to the Veterans cemetery. It's okay if I want to visit the cemetery on less busy and crowded days of the year. And it's equally okay if you choose to visit the cemetery every day.

And today, if I want to remember and laugh at the summer days when my sister and I traded in Great Grandpa and Grandma Allen's used pop bottles and egg cartons to get the two cent return deposits to buy popsicles, I can. If I have to work a few hours on Memorial Day I thank all the veterans for fighting for my freedom to do that.

I especially want to thank my brother Troy. Thank you for the sad, funny, hilarious and precious memories of life with a big brother. I miss you and think of you every day here in the trenches.

Nation recognizes Keeble with Medal of Honor

The late Woodrow Wilson Keeble, a member of the Sisseton-Wahpeton Sioux Tribe who died in 1982 at the age of 65, fought in World War II and in the Korean War. He received the Purple Heart, the Bronze Star, the Silver Star and the Distinguished Service Cross award for his service. Last Friday, May 25, a bill was signed into law by President Bush to authorize the Department of Defense to issue the Medal of Honor to Keeble's family.

Along with the senators from North Dakota and South Dakota, the two states where the Sisseton-Wahpeton Oyate is based, legislation was sponsored to recognize Keeble's service. Congressional action was needed because the time limit already passed to issue the Medal of Honor.

The standalone bill got a boost when it was included in an emergency appropriations measure. But disagreements between Democrats and the White House about funding for the war in Iraq led to a presidential veto earlier this month.

After the U.S. Troop Readiness, Veterans' Care, Katrina Recovery, and Iraq Accountability Appropriations Act was stripped of timetables for the war, it quickly gained Bush's signature. The action came on Memorial Day weekend, as the nation honored its veterans.

The bill cites Keeble's actions on October 20, 1951, during the Korean War. On that day, an already-wounded Keeble single-handedly took out took out four machine gun bunkers.

Keeble was twice recommended for the Medal of Honor. But due to bureaucratic mix-ups, he instead received the Distinguished Service Cross, the Army's second-highest commendation.

The following is an interview by Doreen Yellow Bird with Russell Hawkins, whose stepfather was Woodrow Wilson "Woody" Keeble. The article is reprinted from the Grand Forks Herald with permission.

Woody was his buddy, Hawkins said. They met when Hawkins was 11 or 12 years old, and Woody was courting Hawkins' mother, Blossom Crawford Hawkins Keeble. The couple married a year later.

Hawkins would make popcorn, and he and Woody would watch the TV show "Combat," Hawkins recalled. Hawkins would ask questions, and Woody would write the answers; Keeble, by that time, had had several strokes (attributed to war injuries) and couldn't speak.

Can you tell us about Woodrow Wilson "Woody" Keeble?

He was 6 feet l inch and 235 pounds. Woody was a big, barrel-chested guy, very strong, much stronger than other 235-pounders. Veterans would tell this story:

When they were out in the sticks and a jeep would pull up with ammunition for mail, Woody would go to the front of the jeep, pick it up by the bumper and turn it around so the driver didn't have to do a U-turn.

When you met him, he was just back from the military?

Yes. He was a disabled veteran. He was living in Wahpeton, N.D. He worked in Wahpeton before World War II and before the Korean War. He kept ties with Wahpeton Indian School.

In the local community, he did a lot of lawn and shrubbery work, many times just to keep busy - he would mow people's lawns and cemeteries for free. He enjoyed that.

Can you tell us about his experiences in World War II?

He joined with 164th Infantry, which is Honor thy father and mother

Dear Editor:

My name is Rodney Renville, I am an enrolled member of the Sisseton Wahpeton Oyate. I am a man of God, born again and baptized with the Holy Ghost, and I believe that all brothers and sisters of Native cultures are also baptized with the Holy Ghost.

In my journey through this world I once encountered a storm. As usual it began with fear. I was singing at a wake service at the local community center when the phone was brought to me during the meal. To my surprise it was my wife in a great state of alarm asking me to get home right away, that she had a 12 gauge shotgun loaded and if the people at the crossing would enter she would shoot them. She also said she had called the tribal police and that she has a right to defend herself and the children.

The stepfather of a missing girl said he was going to take my son and hang him and cut him up and that he knows where my son goes and he was going to catch him and chop him up (hurt him bad), he was also calling my wife a bitch and he would get someone to beat her up and if she tried to leave he would smash her car with his car. He was blocking the drive-way with his vehicle. My son got on his bike and left to my sisters. He was scared and crying!

Upon my return home there were three or four cars at the driveway calling us liars.

The police along with the Director of the Child Protection were with the people that were looking for their daughter who had gotten on a bus and come out to Old Agency Village. We had received several calls from the mother about the missing girl, we knew nothing of her other than this girl was on the bus our children ride. By the time I came home from the wake service my son who ran away to the Tiospa Zina Tribal School where they were having a track event.

He admitted to me that the girl did come back to our home with him, but praise God, in the darkness the girl was found and safely returned to her parents.

After this girl was found we came into our home, and were discussing all that had happened because of threats made by the people with the missing daughter and the tribal police. My family was in great distress.

The next morning my wife got up and was very upset yet, I was asking her to calm down but it led to an argument. My daughter called the tribal police. They came and placed me under arrest for domestic violence. I was taken to the jail and I had to spend 76 hours there before I could go to court. I went to court and was released, but I was told I could not go home without a written paper and permission from my wife to be at home. While picking up some things with an escort from tribal police we were able to talk and my wife signed a letter stating I could be home.

I had been praying and fasting while in jail and had received from the Lord that I had to go to the Turtle Mountain Reservation for a prayer service (this is my wife's reservation.). I returned and my children had gotten permission from their mother to go fishing at the dam at Old Agency. My wife had told my sons not to be on the road after dark. It was late and our sons had not returned home yet. So I got up and went to find my sons. They were coming home on BIA 700. It was very dark and I turned around and loaded the bikes in the pickup and got home and sent the boys to bed. The next morning my other son who is only three years old and was lying on the road, there is a very big dangerous hill where we live and I had been telling my kids to stay off the road.

The school bus one day had brought our children home and while the kids were getting off the bus the bus was almost in a serious accident. The bus shop hauled gravel in to to make an approach to safely load and unload the children. I had been telling my children to stay off the road over and over to no avail.

The kids over this winter school year have been slowly progressing to wrong thinking and thinking they can go do whatever they want. So I finally got a green stick and spanked my sons. I left welts on them. I wanted my sons to understand that meant business!

Well again my two older sons and daughter climbed out of the window and went to the dam fishing again. On weekends here, I have seen many high speed chases go right by our house in excess of 100 miles per hour. Semi-trucks are always going up and down this road and also a lot of farm machinery uses this road. After we realized that our children climbed out the window it was 1:30 a.m. and I had no choice but to call the tribal police for assistance in finding the kids.

The police came to our home about 2:00 a.m. and arrested me. They said I was under arrest for child abuse and I wasn't supposed to be in the home.

When I returned from Turtle Mountain I went right to the police station and talked with the dispatcher until 3:30 a.m. and asked him if I could go home and he said he didn't see anything here stating I couldn't go home so I might as well go home.

After getting arrested again I began to pray about the situation and I began to realize how my children over the winter been making statements of "I'll call Child Protection and Tribal Police and you'll go to jail".

It seems to be a learned thing

Northern Perspectives

Let's commit ourselves to treating at least one veteran in a good way

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais at the Vietnam Memorial in Pierre.

Memorial Day weekend has got me thinking of all the young men who are at war today and all those who fulfilled their commitment in the past. A lot of other people will say things about military veterans, but unless you are one, it is difficult to fully describe our veterans who are very special in many ways.

We don't need to only honor those who achieved the highest rank or those who hold the most award medals, but think of all those who were brave enough to step up and meet the challenge. My dad was kind of a short and slight veteran, but I was always proud of his service.

Being from a traditional warrior society has always made me proud of my military service to the nation and in my role in ultimately protecting the homeland of the Sicangu nation. I don't know that I would want my sons serving in some far away land and putting their lives at risk, however. It seems to me that the longer one lives on mother earth and you start to value life so very much, the idea of war seems to senseless.

I can see dying to repel invaders to one's homeland, but to die in a foreign land protecting someone else's sovereign soil is a totally different issue. I was fortunate when I served in Pleiku, S. Vietnam with the 4th Infantry Division as my time in base camp was not that nerve wracking.

The worst we experienced was an occasional mortar attack in the middle of the night and as the sirens wailed we headed for the bunkers right outside our "hooch."

There was no place to sit so we all had to stand in the dark and listen for any further incoming rockets or gun fire. Most of the time, it subsided very quickly.

I remember we slept in our clothes except for our shirts and were ready at a moment's notice. We also went on a couple of ten mile sweeps that were totally grueling, but for a 19 year old kid, it was a "walk in the park." I hate clichés, but some are just so right on that one has to use them.

Many of the military veterans I interact with occasionally are difficult to label as a whole.

Most of the time, they are respectful and not really demonstrative and despite their demeanor, they really are trained to experience and accept all kinds of comments and behavior directed at them.

I guess what I am trying to say, is that we're just not that sensitive when people wish to treat us indifferently or in a discriminatory fashion.

In my last three jobs, no one cared if I was a Vietnam Veteran and no one gave a hoot if they thought they were discriminating against a military veteran.

I assumed that most institutions were supposed to hire a certain percentage of veterans and keep them in their employ, but in reality, that isn't the practice. I would venture to say that most schools and institutions do not cater to veterans.

I used to think I was priceless in terms of what I sacrificed, but no one ever deferred to me as such and today it doesn't even matter.

I do appreciate, however, the respect that many Lakota people will give the flag and in allowing veterans to lead the grand entry. Beyond that, society needs to do more to extend a helping hand to veterans. Many do not have adequate housing, but of course we know that and there are no easy answers.

Memorial Day is a grim reminder not only that we are currently at war, but that many who have sacrificed have moved on.

It is a very moving time as we recall our friends and relatives who have faithfully served. Let's commit ourselves to treating at least one veteran in a good way as the nation loses veterans each day to a host of illnesses, accidents, and natural causes.

With so many young Lakota veterans returning from the Iraq war, it is important to remember that many are grounded in Lakota spirituality and it is important to be able to extend our support to them through appropriate honorings and ceremony.

We understood for the Vietnam Veterans that post traumatic stress disorder was an issue and now that we understand it even in greater terms we can reach out and help the young men and women who are returning.

I urge tribal leaders, families and spiritual leaders to remember our returning veterans and help them.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) resides on the Rosebud with his son, Beaux. He earned a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) from Harvard University. A decorated Vietnam Veteran, he is functionally literate in Lakota and worked at Sinte Gleska University for 20 years as Dean/Chair of Tribal and Graduate Studies.

Notes From Indian Country

The never-ending fight to defend sovereignty

By Tim Giago

(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Indian law, sovereignty and jurisdiction are not "one size fits all" issues in Indian country. There are too many variances in how different states view the Indian nations within their borders and even in how the federal government reacts to issues of sovereignty.

With the surge in Indian gaming in states like California, a state where Public Law 280 gives the state government jurisdiction over law enforcement and the courts, the issues are far different than say in South Dakota, where the state government has no jurisdiction.

When Public Law 280 was first pushed upon the different states by the federal government it was intended to open the doors for state jurisdiction on Indian reservations. The tribes of South Dakota, the Lakota, Dakota and Nakota, have always been strong advocates of their own sovereign status. They had been at war with the state government for too many years to not understand that state jurisdiction in their courts and in law enforcement would automatically bring about severe inequity.

The former president of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe, Robert Burnette (now deceased), fought the idea of Public Law 280 tooth and nail.

He pushed the reality that if the state assumed jurisdiction over the tribal courts, jails and law enforcement, the costs to the state would be prohibitive. With nine Indian reservations in the state and upwards of 70,000 Indians, the transition alone would have cost the state millions and implementing and sustaining the process would have cost millions more.

South Dakota is a very conservative state and when faced with the prospects of having to shell out millions in order to implement the conditions of Public Law 280, they balked and decided that this prospective entanglement best be left in the hands of the federal government.

Mr. Burnett's efforts paid off and South Dakota did not adopt the law. That was not the case in states like California. There was no visible Indian opposition to the suggested law and it passed the state legislature without a problem.

The tribes in California are numerous but very small and they have a small land base. They were among the poorest of tribes in America getting little financial support from the state government until the advent of casino gambling. Situated in a state with a large population, the success of their casinos was almost preordained.

But problems started to develop when the different tribal governments began to disenroll tribal members. According to Robert Edwards, a former vice chairman of the Enterprise Rancheria, there are now about 3,000 members of California tribes that have been disenrolled since Indian gaming became their main source of income. Edwards himself was disenrolled in 2003 along with 70 other members of his tribe.

Edwards said that in too many cases the Bureau of Indian Affairs dodges the bullet in dealing with the problem of tribes disenfranchising members by saying it's a membership issue they cannot deal with because of tribal sovereignty. "That excuse simply doesn't fly anymore as many tribal governments are violating the civil rights and human rights of their members while showing a total disregard for their tribal laws," he said.

Are the tribes disregarding tribal law or state law? As sovereign nations they have every right to enact and implement their own laws and tribal laws may not always follow the dictates of state law because oftentimes they are constructed around culture, spirituality and traditions that far outdate state law. One Native American legal scholar requesting anonymity said, "Now apparently California is going to use the disenrollment issue to expand their encroachment on the sovereignty of California tribes. And as they say, 'As California goes, so goes the nation.'" She continued, "This is very dangerous, but what can large, land-based treaty tribes do when smaller tribes in P.L. 280 states start us down this path? And if we ever find ourselves in a strong financial position, will we begin to face some of the same issues?"

The larger treaty tribes fought for generations to take control over their own future. They fought hard to take back the right to name their own tribal members out of the hands of the BIA.

They knew the history of their own membership and considered themselves imminently more qualified to choose their own members. After many years of protest and action, they finally assumed that right.

The sad case of the Cherokee Nation is now unfolding and once more the BIA has stepped in to interfere with the sovereign rights of the Cherokee people to select their own membership. If the so-called Freedmen of African American descent wins this case it would set a bad precedent for all of Indian country.

One does not have to agree with the decision made by the registered voters of the Cherokee Nation to make the decision to remove the Freedmen from their rolls, but it is the legal right of this sovereign nation to make that decision. Too many Indians have fought and died to earn that right.

When the Indian Civil Rights Act was first introduced many tribal leaders fought its implementation vigorously because it infringed upon some of their cultural, spiritual and traditional rights.

Many saw the Act as a danger to their sovereign rights and although it has not, to date, lived up to those early fears, the possibilities are still there and what is happening in California and Oklahoma presents a clear and present danger to the inherent sovereignty of the Indian nations.

the North Dakota Army National Guard unit. They joined up with two other National Guard units.

Pvt. Woody's first engagement with the enemy was on the island of Guadalcanal. He was involved in one of the bloodiest and fiercest battles in the whole Pacific - the fight for Henderson Airfield.

Henderson Airfield controlled the supply lines for the Pacific, so its capture and defense became one of the most important and pivotal points of World War II. That was where Woody first fought.

The Americans held the field against 20,000 Japanese who were amassed on the banks of the Matanikau River to retake Henderson Airfield. The 164th Infantry reinforced Lt. Col. Lewis "Chesty" Puller's 1st Battalion, 7th Marines, who were defending Henderson field.

The Japanese actually knew the 164th was coming in. They thought they could break through the 164th because they were a green unit that hadn't seen any combat. The Japanese had lost a lot of men at the battle of Bloody Ridge on Guadalcanal prior to this battle.

The Japanese calculated these "recruits" coming in, the 164th, would be of no consequence. They pinpointed the 164th, and the Sendai, a division of battle-hardened soliders, marched there. They thought they could break through the 164th. They were so confident, in fact, that they even brought their artillery pieces - heavy armor - thinking they would break right through. Then, they were going to use those weapons to create a defensive perimeter around Henderson field.

When the Japanese attacked, the 164th met them head on and drove them back. According Jim Fenlon, a private in the 164th, there were 2,800 dead Japanese and approximately 6,000 wounded when the battle was over.

The Sendai division was never able to regain its division strength again.

It was a major battle. There was hand-to-hand combat. The 164th had 37-mm anti tank guns and used them point-blank at the charging Japanese.

It was raining, and the conditions were very poor. There was mud everywhere.

According to one man who fought beside Woodrow, the Japanese were everyplace. The safest place to be was right next to Woody, he said.

Woody never gave his Browning assault rifle a rest; it was a ferocious battle, one of the pivotal fights of World War II. Why was the best place to be beside Woody? First, he was such powerful and imposing figure. One soldier said he saw Woody kill five Japanese soldiers with a knife.

In addition, he gave off such an aura of confidence. He was accurate with his BAR. In fact, after the battle of Henderson Airfield, historians wrote about Woody although they didn't mention him by name.

They said that the 164th didn't collapse under the intense attack by the Japanese. And they wrote that "in the thick of battle and when heavily outnumbered, the men would rally around the big full-blood Sioux Indian from Wahpeton, S.D., whose accuracy with the BAR gun and grenades was legendary throughout the outfit."

What else happened during World War II?

Woody fought throughout the Pacific Theater to the end of the war.

He fought in every major battle that the 164th had after that.

When the Korean War broke out, he volunteered with the 19th Infantry, 24th Division and was sent to George Company as a replacement sergeant.

In October 1951, he engaged the enemy in Kumsong, North Korea, which is some 30 miles north of the 38th Parallel. That is where he was recommended for the Medal of Honor.

This battle was one of the last major offenses. Woodrow was commanding lst Platoon, George Company, 19th Infantry, 24th Division.

All the officers had been killed or wounded in George Company. Woody was a master sergeant.

He was on a mountain ridge and looking across a valley to the next mountain ridge to the north. He saw two platoons pinned down by triangular crossfire from three heavy machine-gun placements. The American forces were pinned down by three heavy bunkers - pillboxes. The bunkers were fortified by open trenches of enemy troops.

Woodrow came down the mountain and joined the two pinned platoons. He assessed the situation; there were two other noncommissioned officers involved, but no commissioned officers. The noncoms were Sgts. Platta and Joe Sagami; they both yielded their command and asked Woody to take charge.

Woody asked for a group of volunteers to attack the enemy. He didn't want to take the whole force.

Woody then led the assault up the mountain but was driven back. He returned and asked for a second group of volunteers. Platta's troop volunteered; Woody led them up, and they were repulsed, too.

The third time, he led Sagami's group of volunteers, and they also were repulsed. Every member had gone up once, and Woodrow had gone three times.

Woody told the platoons to stay put, and he went up alone.

Alone, Woody was able to get into the trenches with the enemy soldiers and eliminated two trenches' worth. From there, he worked his way to the right of the enemy and took out the first bunker with a grenade. Then, he retreated back to his first line of defense, crossed to his extreme left and took out the second bunker with a grenade. Then he went back to the third bunker with a grenade and subdued the rest of the enemy with his rifle.

Woody was hit in the chest, both arms, right calf, knee, right thigh and left thigh. One eyewitness said he saw the chest bullet come out of his back.

When was he discharged?

He was discharged in 1953. He lived in Wahpeton from 1953 until 1966; in 1967, he married my mother and moved to Veblen, S.D. He died in 1982.

with the young kids now that they can control the parents with threats of a call to the authorities whenever they get in trouble or don't get their way!!

The tactic implements fear, which is the exact opposite of Faith. The Bible clearly states and instructs parents to discipline the child.

There is much more I would like to share, and I pray that we as Native people will be blessed with Gods wisdom and be able to get our home, reservations and counties back in order. Its time we ask God to step into the systems and programs of this world that are not working.

Lord help us save our children.

ROSEBUD - A group of Sicangu Lakota educators who are superb Lakota language speakers will be offering a Lakota/Dakota/Nakota summer language immersion program at the St. Joseph's Indian School in Chamberlain. The program will be offered from June 24 to June 29 and will include an intensive 48 contact hours.

Francis Whitebird, Ben Black Bear, Jr., Sandra Black Bear and Philomene White Lance will instruct the classes which represent an exciting opportunity for students, teachers of Indian students and guidance counselors.

Also anyone who works in Indian studies or Indian programs is welcome to apply for the immersion program which will provide room and board and meals free of cost.

However, those who want college credit for the course of study will have to pay for the credit hours.

The deadline to apply for the immersion program is June 15 and applicants are asked to include their name, address, telephone number, email address, tribal affiliation, school where they work, college attended, and school where currently teaching. Include occupation and familiarity with the Lakota language. Applicants will send this information to Marta Neuman, Office of Indian Education, Department of Education, 700 Governors Drive, Pierre, South Dakota 57501.

Three college credits from the University of South Dakota is pending.

The immersion course will focus on how to speak rather then how to write Lakota and will accept 20 students. Students will use sentences as opposed to word vocabulary.

The two male teachers will mentor five students each while the two female teachers will also work with five students each. The male instructors will teach male gender endings to Lakota words, while the females will teach female endings.

The language immersion class is being underwritten by the South Dakota Department of Education and Governor Mike Rounds.

Depending upon the experience and familiarity of Lakota language that students possess there will also be history, song and dance and spirituality introduced in Lakota. There will also be an opportunity for students to participate in inipi.

Students will also be taken through a number of scenarios in which they will use Lakota to interact with each other.

Elder abuse training: neglect most frequent form of abuse

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

MISSION - The RST Eldercare program sponsored two days of training at the Sinte Gleska University multipurpose building on Tuesday and Wednesday, May 22 and 23.

It was noted that there is an RST elder abuse code in existence, however, it has not been fully refined or adopted by the tribal council.

The trainers included Imani Woody and Helen Spencer from the American Association of Retired Persons Legal Training Project. Woody is a training specialist for AARP and assists in the development of training materials and onsite delivery of such training. Spencer is an attorney who has specialized in Indian Elder Law and who has worked closely with elders of the Yakama nation for 25 years.

Participants were given an attractive folder for each day's session which included an agenda, a biography of the trainers, and evaluation sheet for each session and a fact sheet about tribal elder abuse.

Training specialist Imani Woody helped to facilitate a similar training project last year at the same location. It was pointed out that the training had been offered to other programs in the area and that there was a desire to see more programs present.

Attorney Spencer made a presentation on describing her work with the Yakama nation in drafting a tribal elder abuse code which took a lot of work. Ultimately, the document was not adopted by the tribe, but continues to serve as a model for other codes being developed.

One handout entitled "Elder Abuse in Tribal Communities" noted that "Many tribes, villages and pueblos continue to hold elders in high esteem as a valuable link to their past and as a resource for future generations…unfortunately, abuse and neglect of native elders now occurs with alarming frequency in tribal communities. Nationally, neglect is the most frequent form of elder abuse."

Furthermore, the article noted, "Tribal leaders from across the country have identified three major challenges in addressing elder abuse and neglect issues on reservations:

1) A lack of codes addressing elder abuse issues.

2) A lack of policies and procedures for tribal agencies handling elder abuse and neglect issues and

3) A need for increased training on elder abuse and neglect."

Sen. Johnson recuperating and working from home

WASHINGTON - Sen. Tim Johnson works at home in northern Virginia last week. He has turned his dining room table into a makeshift office, with a computer. His work is delivered several times a week. His chief of staff Drey Samuelson works with Johnson at his home. Johnson was discharged from the National Rehabilitation Hospital in late April and has been recuperating at home. He is still in therapy five days a week for several hours each day working on physical, speech and occupational therapy. Johnson suffered from an intracerebral bleed caused by an arteriovenous malformation on Dec. 13, 2006 and has been recovering since.

Grief healing sessions held for students at St. Francis Indian School

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ST. FRANCIS - Veronica Nadeau, a Lakota studies graduate at the Associate of Arts level and a human services graduate at the Bachelor of Science level from Sinte Gleska University was the architect of the three grief healing sessions held this spring for students at St. Francis Indian School.

She labeled her healing project the "Sicangu Oyate Teca Ho."

The winter months on the Rosebud reservation were a time of sadness for Sicangu tribal members as several young people had died from suicide and automobile accidents. Nadeau lost her daughter ten years ago to a drunk driver and despite the very tough time, she has endured through being involved in sobriety honorings and generally raising the consciousness of the Sicangu Lakota as to the tremendous hurt that is caused by the loss that alcohol and suicide can inflict upon a people.

When she experienced an attempted suicide in her own family this spring, she enlisted the advice of Sicangu medicine man leksi Leonard Crow Dog. She wrote, "I was very angry that they would do something such as this. I felt that they hurt their nagi (spirit) when they tried to do something such as this. I set out to have a healing ceremony but the place that I had wanted to get it done kept falling through."

As a youth activity, Nadeau wanted to take 60 students to Storm Mountain, but was advised to do the work at SFIS. When she approached the school board and the administration, they were fully supportive of the healing project.

Therapist, Lula Red Cloud of Hermosa thought that she could work with students by breaking them down into several groups, and thus, Nadeau decided to coordinate three smaller grief healing sections. The respective enrollment for the three ses-

Women sentenced for pirating DVDs

SIOUX FALLS (AP) - Two women learned firsthand that the feds are serious about that warning shown at the start of home movies - the one that threatens prosecution for making illegal copies.

Rena Cummins, 61, of Gallup, N.M., was sentenced in U.S. District Court in Albuquerque, N.M., to 2 years of probation for her part in an operation that was based on South Dakota's Rosebud Indian Reservation. She and Violet Little Elk were indicted in U.S. District Court in Pierre on a copyright infringement and aiding and abetting charge after agents seized 774 DVDs on Aug. 25, according to court documents.

Between January and August of last year, they reproduced and distributed copies of motion pictures without authority, prosecutors said in court documents.

Little Elk, whose age and address are not listed, agreed to pay $500 in restitution to the Motion Picture Association of America, Inc., and was placed on nine months of pretrial diversion, which allows her to avoid prosecution if she abides by the terms.

Best of the Best basketball tournaments June 16

FAITH - Faith to host Best of the Best Basketball Tournament for two weekends in June. On June 9 and 10 it will be a tournament for grades 3 to 8 grade with boys and girls having their own divisions. On June 16 and 17 it's high school boys and girls divisions. There will be an entry fee. Anyone within the age limit is encouraged to enter.

The grade school and junior high tournament is limited to eight teams per division and the high school is 12 teams per division. You can call Shawn Peterson 863-2267 or Jenni Fisher at 206-0212 to receive an entry form.

There will be prizes for first to third place and also individual awards including All Tourney, Ms Hustle, Ms. Defense, and most 3 pointers.

All South Dakota High School rules will apply. All proceeds will benefit the South Dakota Jewel basketball team from the Cheyenne River Reservation to attend the NABI Basketball Tournament in Phoenix, Ariz. Forty teams are selected national wide to attend and the girls have been accepted so they are busy raising money.

It will take approximately $7,000 for the girls to attend so there is a lot of fund raising ahead of them, and one of the major fund raisers is this basketball tournament. It was decided to have the tournament in Faith because of the facility and being able to play two games at once in one location.

The girls are also looking at doing a bingo on Friday night June 8 in Faith. The location is undecided at this time, this may also include a Indian Taco Supper.

The girls are also doing a money raffle that started on May 21. Ticket cost $20 for a chance to win $50 in the daily drawings or $200 on Friday's. They are also raffling off a star quilt.

The girls that were selected to attend are Lacy and Ronnie Leaf, Kayla Turning Heart, Scottie Laundreaux, Shawna Franco, Krista Bear Stops, Kace Waloke, Sara Widow, and Mary Knife. They are all very honored to attend and look forward to representing South Dakota in Arizona.

If anyone is interested in entering the tournament, making a donation to the girls or for more information on any of the above items they can contact any of the girls, or their coaches Shawn Peterson 605-863-2267 or Jenni Fisher at 605-206-0212.

Parents, public air concerns at first listening session concerning Rapid City area schools

By Vicky Wicks
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY - Giving Native students a fair shake in school was the topic on the table Tuesday night when a group of parents, school administrators, criminal justice officials, and concerned citizens met in Rapid City.

The listening session-the first public meeting of a newly-formed group, the Rapid City Positive Impact Committee was mediated by Grace Sage from the U.S. Department of Justice community relations service.

Sage said RCPIC has decided to begin its efforts by setting up a student advocacy program, with advocates from outside the school system serving students, and by establishing an open dialog between the committee and the community.

Deb Martinez, one of RCPIC's founding parents, said the group will be soliciting information from students also. "If we don't have their input, we're doing it blindly," she said.

The group chose its name to emphasize its desire to have a positive effect on the schools. "We didn't want to be listed as disgruntled parents," Martinez said.

"It about getting our kids through high school…not just Native Americans but all kids. We want to see them graduate," she said.

Tuesday night's meeting was scheduled to give community members a chance to ask questions and vent frustrations, and a few parents did that.

But the group will not be able to publicly discuss specific in-school incidents because of confidentiality issues for both students and staff, according to Rapid City Superintendent of Schools Peter Wharton. RCPIC will be able to air parents' disagreements with school policies, he said.

Policy decisions were questioned by Maggie Ross, a parent once employed by the school district, who said she is concerned that programs for Native students are under consideration for change or elimination.

Margie Rosario, school board president and RCPIC member, said racial equality can't be accomplished with special programs for Native students, but instead American Indians have to be considered in "every curriculum, every program, every decision."

Josie Chase, a social worker who attended the meeting, concurred with Rosario on that point. "Diversity makes society richer," she said, but people in this state have a difficult time with that concept. If Native people are to have power and authority and "if real, honest change is going to occur," then they "have to be part of the decision-making infrastructure," she said.

Mona Bettelyoun, a parent whose children attended Rapid City schools, said she wanted to "put in a plug for parental involvement" and said she was always able to go to her children's schools and find the person she needed to talk to.

Another school policy, allowing probation officers to go into schools to make contact with juvenile probationers, was criticized by Robin Page, a parent who said her family is moving back to Salt sions was 5, 6 and 9. Each student chose to come on their own and put a lot of work into the sessions.

The plan was to have students stay the weekend at the school. During the first healing session on a Friday evening five students discussed the different religions from around the world as well as the need for increased Lakota spirituality.

The Saturday morning session was devoted to explaining grief while each was to choose three words dealing with grief that they were to work on. Preparations were made for the oinikage which had been prepared by Myrna Leader Charge. Nadeau explained to the students how to make tobacco ties for the ceremony and the purpose of making flags.

A ceremony later on with Jerome Lebeau, wapiya wicasa, of Sharps Corner was held in the same room where the students had slept. Nadeau wrote, "I had wanted family to come and support the youth during the hocoka wakan. Only one family came. The youth were all seated in front of the altar. For the first timer's it was scary. But they came out the more stronger. They talked about they got out of being in the oinikage and the hocoka wakan and from what they talked about it was a very good experience for them."

On the final day, Sunday, the students honored a love one, not necessarily deceased.

Lula explained grief further as each lit a candle and talked about their loss. Each one was given water and puff from a cigarette. They each smudged with sweet grass and then, were given wasna and choke cherry juice. A memorial song and healing song was then sung for each followed by a hug.

Nadeau said, "We told them that they were the beginning of a ripple and that they played an important part of the beginning of healing for the youth in their school and in our Lakota Nation. To never feel alone because now they had each other."

The grief healing sessions are an important step in helping high school students to understand grief and to be able to process it in a supportive environment that includes Lakota prayer, song, ceremony and solidarity.

A line from a poem a written by a student who completed the grief healing seemed to be an appropriate summary of the sessions, "Together if we look back then each of us may find, it's easier to look ahead. To let tomorrow shine, if we share our memories, the best will still remain. And, yet we'll have found a way to leave behind the pain."

This past weekend Nadeau took several students from the third grief healing to Sharps Corner to attend a wopila with Jerome Lebeau. Dr. Dan Foster, Francis Whitebird, Myrle and Candice Anderson along with Nadeau were there to show their support for the students.

Lake City because her seven Native children can't get the services they need in Rapid City.

Page said juveniles are embarrassed by being singled out and pulled from their classrooms to meet with their probation officers.

Judd Thompson, chief court services officer for the Seventh Judicial Circuit, said program involving probation officers in the schools has been in place for about five years and has been positive for families. "We advocate for those children," he said. But he agreed that the policy should be discussed at future meetings.

State Senator Tom Katus said he and other legislators recently toured Pine Ridge, and he encouraged Rapid City schools to look to Red Cloud School as an example of success.

Red Cloud, a private parochial school started by Jesuits "in one of the poorest counties in the nation," sends most of its students on to college, he said.

In Rapid City's two large high schools, "Native Americans get lost," he said.

Both Katus and Ross talked of current plans to set up a charter school in Rapid City.

Martinez said she would like to find ways to encourage Native kids to get into extracurricular activities such as sports, and Wharton added that a strong drama program and other activities are also available.

Suzan Nolan, retired school counselor, said sports are fine, but academics need to be stressed. Native students are not often found in upper level classes, not because they don't have the ability, but because they aren't held to high expectations, she said.

The school system cannot on its own lead Native students to success, Nolan said. Achievement is the result of a "hand in glove relationship" with the school and parents who get their children to class on time every day, starting in kindergarten.

To "break down achievement barriers," she said, we need to change what we expect of Native children, to let them know "they can be a 4.0 and go to Harvard."

The next public meeting of RCPIC will be held at the Rapid City Police Department on June 20 at 1 p.m.

Traditional healing and honoring for RST veterans

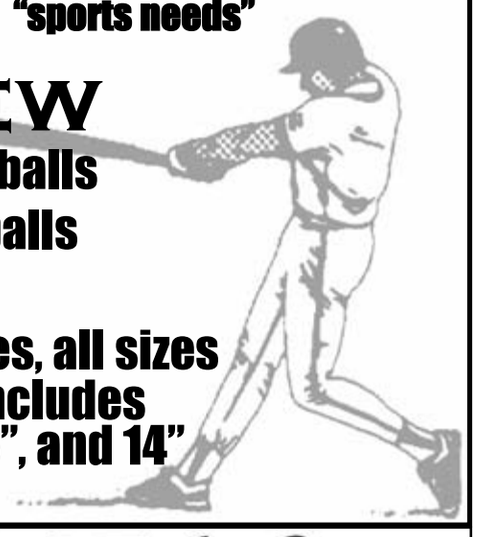
By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - A traditional healing for Rosebud Sioux veterans entitled "The Mind, Heart, Body and Spirit" was held at the RST Veterans building on Tuesday and Wednesday, May 22 and 23. The director of RST Veteran Affairs, Orlando Morrison, said that his staff and a core group of people like Marcida Eagle Bear of the RST alcohol program, Hattie Dunham of the RST education department and cooks were responsible for planning and executing the two day affair. Other staff included Billie Jo Thunder and Troy Lynn Peneaux.

Several American flags adorned the entry way into the RST veterans affairs compound and a tipi and a couple of canopies had been erected on the left side. The temperature was very comfortable for the two days as many veterans could be seen arriving to see what was on the day's agenda and then, perhaps returning later or the next day to take part. Some veterans simply sat outside at the entrance to the garage. There was a lot of humor and visiting as many veterans would make it a point to visit with those newly arriving.

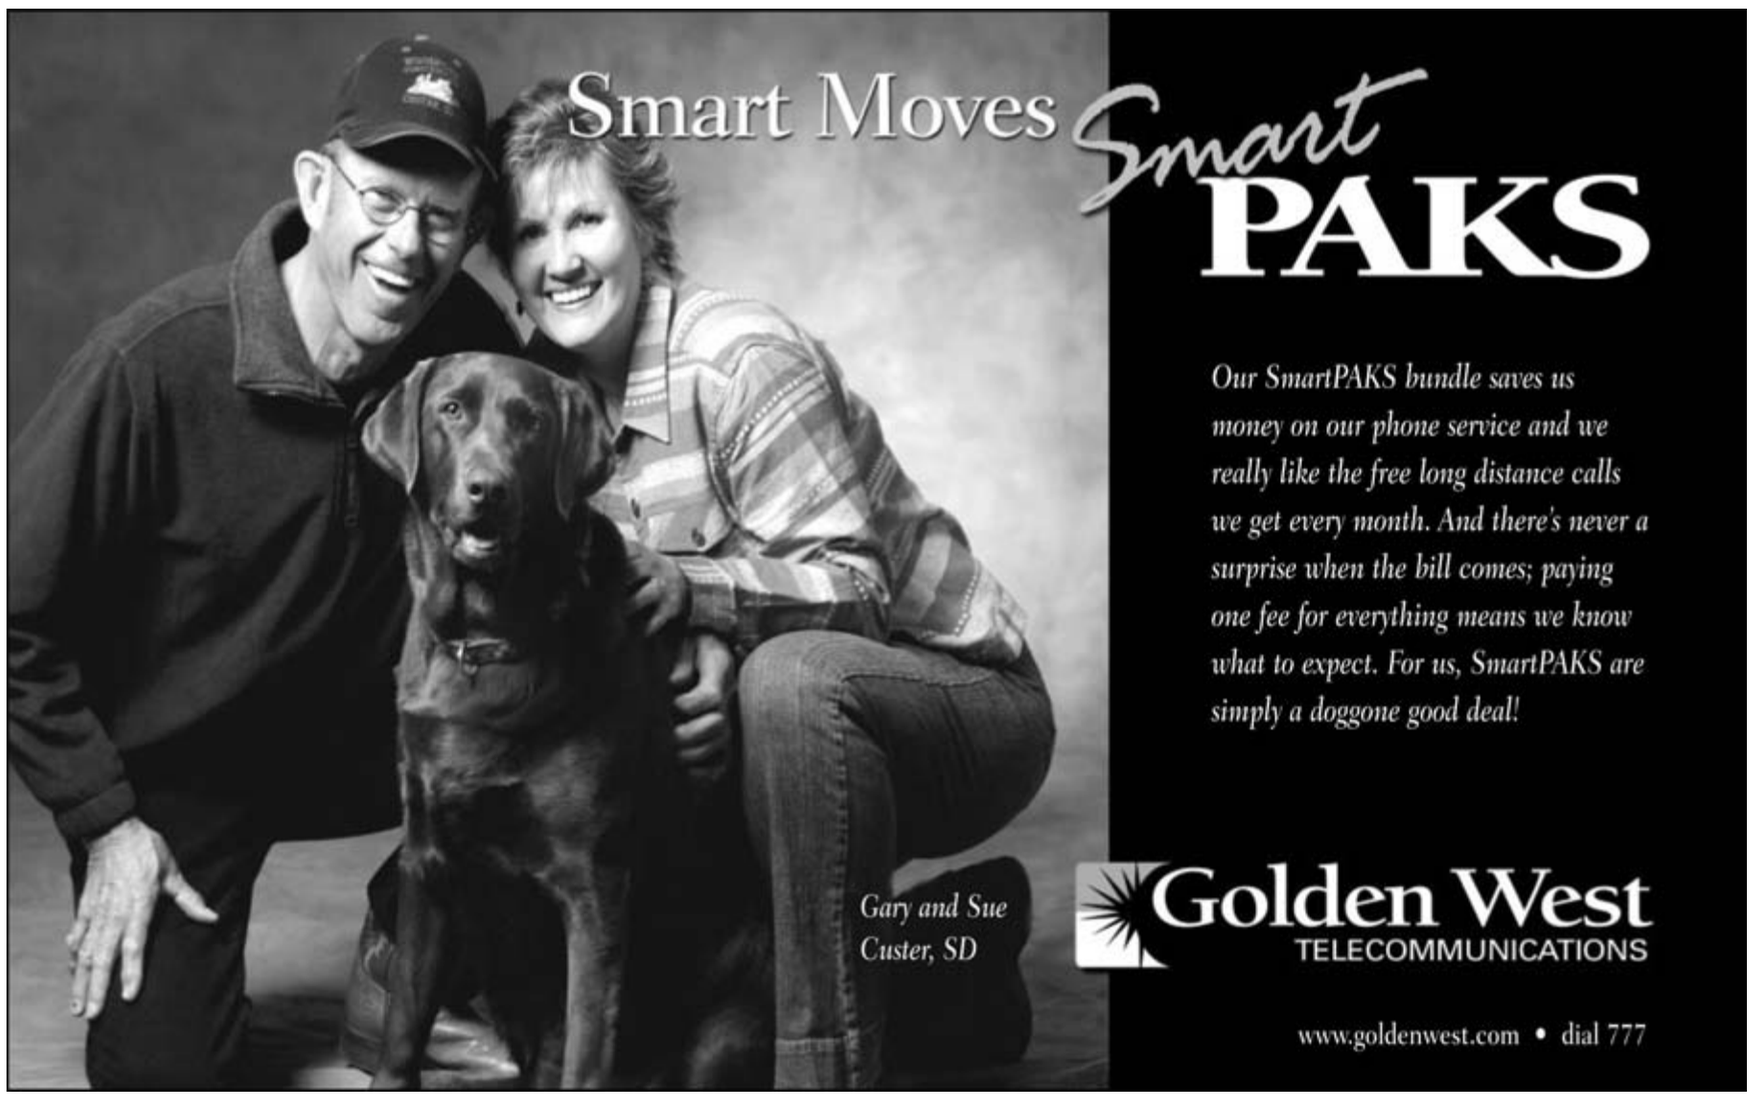
RST council representative Russell Eagle Bear served as the eyapaha for the two day event, while Sicangu medicine man Roy Stone, Sr. prayed for the akicita. Francis Cutt, of the Sinte Gleska University Lakota Studies department also served as an eyapaha and gave a presentation on Lakota warrior societies.

Former combat medic, Francis Whitebird, who served in Vietnam and is a Purple Heart recipient, said that he is on full disability and that has allowed him to retire. He has two sons who have followed in his footsteps and are currently serving in the U. S. Army infantry. One son, Colin is currently in Iraq, while Brendon a paratrooper will eventually join him there.



Whitebird said the session on post traumatic stress disorder presented by Dr. Dan Foster of the Rosebud I.H.S. hospital mental health department was especially helpful as he was not aware of some of the current information on PTSD. SGU faculty member, Rodney Bordeaux, gave a presentation on his work with telemedicine. After the first day, several veterans lined the entrance and participated in the flag retreat. By that time, the late afternoon winds had become quite chilly and the cooler temperatures would carry over until the next day.

The second day included a session in which a buffalo was field dressed while prayers were said by Duane Hollow Horn Bear also of the SGU Lakota Studies. A very tasty nutritious meal of buffalo and vegetable stew was prepared outside over an open flame, Lakota style.



Veterans also had the opportunity to participate in the inipi along with Roy Stone, Jr. Prior to the meal, all of the veterans present were called up front by Russell Eagle Bear and Morrison and presented with a gift. Marcida Eagle Bear presented a footlocker to Francis Whitebird in honor of her son Lance Corporal Russell Eagle Bear.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I was laying down reading your letters and I got a phone call from my mom but it made me sad. I couldn't't read on because of the tears in my eyes. Can you please tell me why my mom doesn't love me?

Also, I will be moving away from the rez. How do you see things for me in that new town? I feel scared and alone, also the man I've been with for 15 years will not be moving with me.

Also can you tell me, if there is a guy who likes me in this town, if there is, can you give me a hint. I like him but I need to know if he feels the same about me. I'm having money problems and suffering from depression. Will things get better for me, or will things change in my life.

God bless Anna,

Wanting Change

Dear Wanting Change:

Your mom does love you even though she is hyper-critical of you and uses a sharp tone in her voice when she speaks with you.

You are so different from her that she doesn't understand you and she doesn't trust that you run your life in the best way - so she contradicts, complains and is generally hard on you.

Mothers sometimes have a hard time of letting go of control of their adult children.

Please don't assume she doesn't love you, know that she does, and use some detachment skills in reacting to her.

That will make your life much better. Once again, let me recommend that you read The Four Agreements by Don Miguel Ruiz available at Borders.

Yes, the guy you like has interest in you.

He is not ready however for a committed relationship, Don't fool with yourself by assuming that is okay for you too...because eventually he will hurt your feelings by dropping out of the relationship should you start one with him.

Please help yourself by looking at each day as a new opportunity to explore the possibilities of life. You don't have to have a relationship with a man to be happy.

The depression you feel needs to be chased away before you get involved or your neediness will exhaust any man that gets involved with you.

I see that by next summer you will have a better handle on your life, will have more feelings of success and will be more ready for a good relationship.

In the meantime, work on improving your life by examining how you react to everything around you.

You are a wonderful person and the first step to a better life is to realize that. Blessings to you on your journey.

Dear Anna,

I have read your column and I am hoping you can help me with some decisions I am struggling with in my life right now. I am seriously considering leaving my boyfriend of five years, we more or less have just grown apart but I feel in order to have a good life - the only choice I have is to let him go.

To be honest I feel he's the one who wants out, because he doesn't love me anymore. Is this true?

Also, I have lived off the reservation for many years and am considering moving back for a change in careers is this the right move?

Three, I am having problems at my work, due to discrimination. What will become of this? If at all, does anything happen?

Four, someone from my past keeps appearing in my dreams what is the reason for these dreams?

Even when I do not think of this person. Well, I hope you can help me in any way, so I can get this off my mind and get rid of all this stress I am going through.

Tired and stressed

Dear Tired and stressed:

Leaving your relationship seems to be the only option. You can't make someone love you in the way that builds a successful future.

If you stay and try to hold on you will only create a feeling of "less-than-ism" on your part. You will feel that you can't do anything right and that no matter what you cannot make this man happy (which by the way is true - nobody can make another person happy),

Does he love you? In a way, but not the way it takes to build a happy live together. Remember, most relationships eventually do not work, because they are not meant to.

Be thankful for the good times, learn something from the bad, and let him go.

There is something going on right now at the spiritual level that is drawing families back together.

The times in front of us are uncertain and filled with earth changes, economic hardship and confusion.

The Creator is moving many people closer to family members. That combined with practical considerations make your move back to the rez a good thing.

Open up your heart and decide to follow your inclinations. Moving back is a good thing and does help your career path. Begin right now to search for an opening in one of the programs back on the rez. Since it is "meant to be", employment won't be too hard to find.

Keep written documentation of all the discriminatory behaviors toward you at work. You are leaving anyway; but you may want to file a legal complaint against these people. There is no room for discrimination anywhere on this earth anymore - so people that are caught in this type of thinking have earned some pretty heavy karma.

The particular person, however, that I see being unfair does not consider herself to be discriminatory - rather, there is unjust treatment due to personal reasons (she just doesn't like you.) and it influences other people around her.

The dream guy - well, some might consider communication of his spirit to yours. I feel that he may appear in your life sometime in the next four or five months.

It does not indicate a deep and abiding love or that a committed relationship will happen; it does indicate that you are being thought about. It is more than likely just a desire on your part to feel loved, projected on someone that you did love, to recall the feeling of love within your own comfort zone.

Please learn how to be more comfortable with your life and quit over-thinking everything. If most problems could be solved by worry you wouldn't have any.

Worry is not positive, and most problems are not really problems, they are just a focus on the worst possible outcome.

Will Rogers once said, "most of the problems I have had in my life never happened." No truer words have ever been spoken.

Dear Anna,

I was reading some of the letters in your article and I just had to write in to give a shout out from the Windy City.

My mother was from Rosebud and I had the pleasure of going about two years ago for the first time.

It was a wonderful experience and I don't remember my mother too well since I got taken from her when I was about two and a half but I felt so connected to her. I know how much she suffered and how unloved and unsafe she was throughout her life. I just want to know, does my mother know this?

She died in a car accident when I was about five or six and as I said I don't remember her but I know that she lives in me.

Am I right to think that she is with me always and is she proud of me? Is she proud of her grandchildren and her great grandchildren?

Wondering about mom

Dear Wondering:

Yes, your mother still walks with you, and she is proud of you. Your feeling is part of the truth of reality. Those that pass away do live on in our hearts.

The love you feel permeates all boundaries; and although your mother is not physically present on the earth plane - spirits never die. Your mom has learned how to "travel" (so-to-speak) from one dimension to another and she has assumed a role of guardian-ship with you. Her heart and love can be felt, and she will always be there with you, your children and grand and great-grandchildren.

Your unconditional love for her is felt by her and calls to her throughout the universe. She is proud and happy for you.

On the day that it is your time to leave the earth she will be the first one to greet you and walk you over.

You are a beautiful person and your spirit of love is felt by many; including your mother. God Bless you.

Dear Anna,

I've been working on my G.E.D since January and was wondering if I'm ever going to pass. I'm trying my best at it but somethings hold me down.

And second of all I'm tired of walking to and from Kyle.

Do you see me getting a car because I so need one.

Just a wonder

Dear Just a wonder:

Yes, you will get your G.E.D. unless you give up. The only thing that is in your way is your fear that you won't get it - therefore you procrastinate.

Your fear is bigger than your faith in yourself.

I know you are tired of walking - and good for you for doing that.

Here is the scenario of events:

1. Getting you G.E.D.,
2. Getting a J- O - B.
3. Getting a car. Good luck (I see a small bluish green car).

You can email Anna Bee your questions at lakota1868@gwtc.net or fax to (605) 685-1870, or write to PO Box 386, Martin, S.D. 57551.

MINUTES

SHANNON COUNTY MINUTES OF MAY 18TH, 2007

The Shannon Board of County Commissioners met in special session May 18, 2007. Present Connie Whirlwind Horse, Deborah Rooks-Cook, Tom Conroy, Vanessa Roubideaux, Sue Ganje, County Auditor and Julie Graham, Clerk. Absent Inez White Hawk.

The meeting was called to order with time being 3:08 p.m. Eleven people were present including Sheriff Jeff Not Help Him, and former Sheriff Jim Daggett.

The special meeting was called due to a request by Lance Russell, States Attorney, concerning the recent Sheriff appointment. Inez White Hawk was present at 3:13 p.m.

Russell presented a letter from the Oglala Sioux Tribe Department of Enrollment he had received in response to his inquiry about possible family relationship between Commissioner Inez White Hawk and Sheriff Jeff Not Help Him. White Hawk stated she was not a blood relative to Jeff Not Help Him.

The request was made due to a statement that was made during the Sheriff appointment procedure.

Russell presented a copy of a SD Supreme Court, (which accepts NJ Supreme Court decisions) case which references conflict of interest and addressed the Board about his concern about conflict of interest while voting for the Sheriff appointment, which would invalidate the action taken, and advised about potential civil liability for the County. Discussion followed which included the Chairman's statement that no action would be taken as they now have a Sheriff living in Shannon County, with no second job, and relayed positive comments they have received since their appointment of the new Sheriff.

Discussion also included questions as to who would make the determination if there was a conflict, which Russell indicated would be a Judge if the action was challenged, along with the determination if any monies were owed to Daggett. Jeff Not Help Him stated he has no jurisdiction over White Hawk, as he has no jurisdiction over tribal members.

The letter from the OST Enrollment Office was reviewed, and although White Hawk and Not Help Him are second cousins, White Hawk's mother, Bernice White Hawk, gave testimony on the family history, which included an adoption, and discussion was held.

Russell advised he will request confirmation for his file.

Motion by Conroy, seconded by Rooks-Cook to adjourn, time being 3:45 p.m. All voting yes, the motion carried.

Could I have pre-diabetes?

Most people don't know if they have pre-diabetes. You could have prediabetes if:

- Someone in your family has diabetes.
- You weigh more than you should
- You had diabetes while you were pregnant (called gestational diabetes)
- You had a baby weighing over 9 lbs. at birth
- A doctor or nurse has said to you that you had a "touch of sugar" or "pre-diabetes"

THREE MILE CREEK - "Our first graduating class in 1973 had four graduates, this year we will present diplomas to 168 graduates," said Tom Shortbull, OLC president, "over the years we have had over 2,100 graduates who have had an impact on their families, their communities and to the Lakota Nation as a whole."

Graduation ceremonies are set for Sunday, June 24 at 10 am at the Three Mile Creek pow wow grounds southwest of Kyle at Piya Wiconi, the college's main administrative offices. Eight masters degrees and 16 bachelors degrees and a number of associate degrees and certificates are set to be presented during the ceremonies.

Stan Adelstein, a businessman, philanthropist and past state legislator will be the keynote speaker on Sunday. While Stan spent two terms in the state house and two in the state senate, he served on the Tribal/State Relations committee and has been a long time advocate for Indian issues. Adelstein served as the chair of Rapid City's He Sapa College Center construction fundraising committee, donated the center's parking lot and was named S.D. Philanthropist of the Year by Governor Mike Rounds in 2004.

Stan Adelstein

"Just as he believes that his efforts to maintain the Jewish traditions and history have enriched South Dakota, he also believes that the Lakota people's efforts to maintain their traditions, their language and their beliefs will serve to enrich the lives of South Dakota as well," said Shortbull, "we are very pleased to have Stan Adelstien address our graduates, he has been a great role model for so many people around the state and beyond."

The college is dedicating and unveiling their Oglala Lakota Veterans Monument on Saturday, June 23 at 10 a.m. between the Piya Wiconi center and the pow wow grounds as part of this year's graduation activities.

Captain Tasha Standing Soldier, Oglala Lakota, AFSC: 43P3, Pharmacist, who is currently stationed at Ellsworth Air Force will be representing the U.S. military at the dedication. Capt. Standing Soldier is a pharmacist assigned to the 28th Medical Support Group Squadron. She graduated from Little Wound High School and received her associate of arts in life sciences at OLC in June 2002 and graduated from South Dakota State University in May 2004 with her bachelor in science. In May 2006 she received her doctor of pharmacy degree. She is a member of the American Pharmacist Association and a member of Kappa Epsilon. She has one son, Damon Standing Solder 6-years old. Upon graduation, she was commissioned as an officer in the United States Air Force. Additional activities include the GED graduation on June 21 at 5 p.m. at the Piya Wiconi Administation Center, the Baccalaureate Dinner on June 22 at 6 p.m. at Little Wound School in Kyle, the graduation wacipi on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, June 22-24 and a 5K/10K run on June 23 at 6 p.m.

Lunderman selected at Rosebud Casino manager

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspndent

MISSION - Richard "Tuffy" Lunderman, a Rosebud Sioux tribal member is home at a time when utilizing tribal members in critical positions is becoming a desired trend. Lunderman was selected to lead the Rosebud Casino as its new general manager and for the first three weeks he is getting to know his administrative staff and the some 200 casino employees.

Lunderman is widely known as a superb high school basketball player, who was a little ahead of his time as a tenacious point guard at Todd County High School in the mid 1960's. His team likely knocked off more than just one contender for the state basketball title.

After high school he was recruited to play basketball and baseball at Black Hills State College and subsequently spent many years in promoting health and wellness through his athletic pursuits. In his spare time, he also organized several independent Lakota teams to compete for a number of national titles.

Lunderman

Having spent a lifetime in the athletic field in teaching and mentoring young people, he also worked at Sinte Gleska University as a coach and at Little Wound School as a Dean of Students, coach and athletic director. More recently, he was employed in the Todd County School District.

At the Rosebud Casino, Lunderman is taking the opportunity to perfect his leadership style while attending to the other two businesses that fall under his scope of work. He said, "I want to be a leader who portrays a healthy lifestyle and values. It is no different than being an athletic director. Being in a leadership and management position you have a full work day and you have to be here to get the job done."

One of his employees reminded him that one must balance their professional commitments with their personal life when he said, "You shouldn't be here all the time, because if something changes, you may not be able to see it."

He recognizes the potential that the Rosebud Fuel Plaza represents and says that one must manage a business like they own it. The business management field is not unlike that of coaching in that one must carefully build a team and have them on board because they understand the issues.

Utilizing the casino as way to fight stereotypical views of Lakota people is something Lunderman would like to do through promotion of the culture and by further tapping into the tremendous potential that is represented by the population base in Cherry County in Nebraska and the counties of Tripp, Mellette, Jackson counties and beyond. He said, "Once a patron gets disillusioned with the casino and we lose them, it is very hard to get them back."

Analyzing just where the casino is and what its potential is, is a task that he is undertaking by being able to look at the statistics and other data and seeing what resources the casino has to earmark for a particular undertaking.

The summer months promise to be a peak period for the Rosebud Casino with the fourth of July powwow approaching. The fact that it is midweek will allow more competitive dancers to come to Rosebud. Lunderman said, "It is true that the Rosebud Fuel Plaza has the lowest fuel prices around. We need to look at turning over the dollars here 2-3 times." His desire is that more tribal members will utilize the fuel plaza for their needs.

Other summer events anticipated include the Sturgis bike rally which sees a lot of traffic on U.S. Highway 83 south and a host of community

Meade County denies Jay Allen off sale liquor license because of unpaid bills

STURGIS - The Sturgis County Line biker bar and its owner, Jay Allen, continue their quest to offer a full venue of liquor sales to the biker crowd when the bike rally rolls around, however, the Meade County commissioners ensured that that would not happen at least partially.

Last Thursday, the commissioners denied Allen an off sales liquor license which would have allowed the sale of beer in a variety of packaged forms where patrons could purchase as much as they desired.

County leaders pointed to unpaid and late payment to construction contractors as their reason for Thursday's denial.

Allen was understandably upset citing his efforts to raise $19,000 for children and the elderly and locating a successful business in the area for the last 20 years.

Sturgis County Line still holds a valid on-sale license to sell beer by the drink which can be taken to campsites. The bar, however, will not be able to sell beer by the six-pack or twelve- pack. The on-sale license does not come up for renewal until the end of the year and that will allow the establishment to take advantage of the large crowd of bikers who will ascend on the area in August.

Allen must get his unpaid bills taken care of by then or he could jeopardize the on-sale license.

The latest was good news for a number of American Indian groups and local ranchers who have documented the tremendous noise, crowds and general impact of having a large number of visitors to the area. Being so close in proximity to the sacred Bear Butte or Mata Paha mountain has been of continuing concern to such groups.

The Lakota, Northern Cheyenne and Arapaho regard the ancient site as sacred to their early movements and even today many tribal people choose to worship at the site which is protected by the state. The Rosebud Sioux Tribe owns some land close to Bear Butte and manages a piece of property there.

When granting such licenses the Meade County commissioners consider the location of the proposed business and the character of the owners. In this case, the commissioners said the fact that Allen had unpaid bills owed to contractors for ten months reflected on his

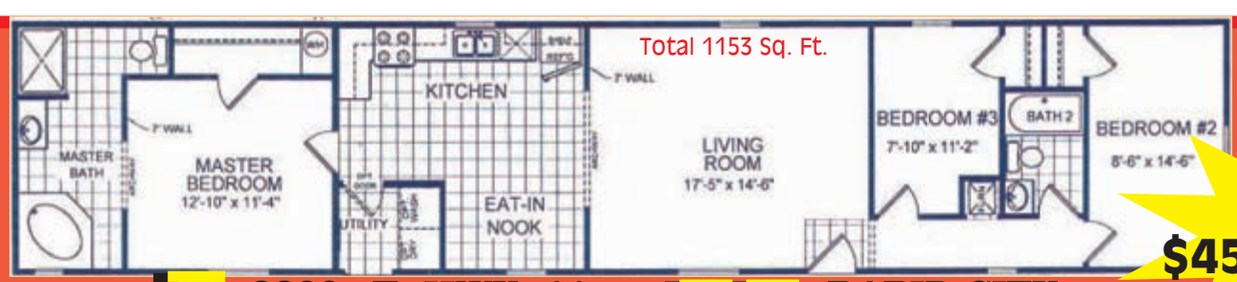
Conroy, Dull Knife earn seats on Shannon County School Board

BATESLAND - Unofficial results from Tuesday's school board election for the Shannon County School Board found Tom Conroy with 87 and Barbara Dull Knife with 70 as the two top vote getters to fill the two seats left vacant by the outgoing Melvin and Ruth Ann Cummings.

The school board will certify the results at their next board meeting on June 25 and Tom Conroy and Barbara Dull Knife will be seated at the first meeting in July for a three year term.

Joe Morrisette was third with 58, Etta Mae Runnels was fourth with 57 and Gerald Big Crow was fifth with 52.

Collins CJ Clifford had 51 and Joseph White Bear Claws finished with 29.



Melvin Cummings had served on the Shannon County School Board for 33 continuous years and was joined on the board by his wife Ruth Ann for the last several terms.

Shannon County operates K-8 schools in Batesland, Wolf Creek, Red Shirt and Rockyford, opened a new school in Red Shirt last year and is looking to add to the facilities at Rockyford. Shannon County has over 1,100 students enrolled. They have also opened up a pre-school at Wolf Creek that has been very positive.

After eight years as superintendent, Margo Heinert is leaving Shannon County on June 30 and will become the new superintendent at Todd County in July.

Curt Voight will take over the Shannon County superintendent job on July 1.

LAKOTA LANGUAGE SURVEY RESULTS

Oceti Wakan, a small non-profit, in Calico Community on the Pine Ridge Reservation has been doing a systematic house to house survey in each of the nine Districts on Pine Ridge Reservation to see the health of the Lakota language on our reservation. This has been funded by an ANA (Administration for Native Americans) grant. There have been over 8,000 people who have been surveyed. Oceti Wakan mission is for the preservation of Lakota language and culture. We have developed books and CDs on both.

We would like to share with the community the results for each District with the people. As you will be able to see, we are in serious jeopardy of losing the Lakota language. We hope these results that we will be publishing over the next several weeks will help us break the denial of just how serious this is.

Eagle Nest District Lakota Language Survey Results
192 households were surveyed with 1,065 tribal members.

0-6 years old (227 children) 0 children can speak the Lakota language – 0%

40% of all households have at least one person that speaks the Lakota in it.

Next week we will give you the results of Medicine Root District and Pass Creek District. Oceti Wakan has been meeting with the elders and in District meetings about creating a "VISION" for our long term language goal. WE NEED MORE INPUT TO CREATE THIS VISION! We want to ask anyone who has a part of the answer on what we can do to change this and to make this vision a reality to call us.

We welcome your input to create this "Vision". Please respond to us at:

powwows and sun dances on the Rosebud during the height of the tourist season which often sees record dollars being spent.

Lunderman is quite aware of the need for a marketing strategy. He said, "Everyone here is in marketing. It doesn't cost anything to say 'hi.' We are tracking spending patterns and encouraging people to come back. It comes down to customer service and our ultimate goal is to be the 'friendliest' casino around."

Finally, he sees a need to give the casino a small facelift and giving it a new look by re-positioning the furniture and slot machines and by also purchasing some new machines.

character and was a factor in denying the off-sale liquor license.

Allen can apply for an off-sale license a year from now. He also operates the Sturgis County Line which was built last year and apparently owes a half dozen contractors for work completed.

One piece of irony is that fact that the Meade County Commissioners have taken a lot of heat for continually approving Allen's requests for liquor licenses, while Commissioner Dean Wilks was quoted as saying, "It's ironic that you stiff local contractors."

Tamra Brennan of the Protect Sacred Sites organization wrote, "Now if we can just get the bikers to not support his place, and he has no business this year…Was good to see them actually do the right thing for once…wished it would have been based upon our stand on this but it's a step forward."

Organization looking for weather watchers

PINE RIDGE - If you are interested in the weather and would like to contribute to the weather communication, then you can join a network that does.

Community Collaborative Rain, Hail and Snow Network is a unique, non-profit, community-based network of volunteers of all ages and backgrounds working together to measure and map precipitation (rain, hail and snow). One of the neat things about participating in this network is coming away with the feeling that you have made an important contribution that helps others. By providing your daily observation, you help to fill in a piece of the weather puzzle that affects many across your area in one way or another. You also will have the chance to make some new friends as you do something important and learn some new things along the way.

In some areas, activities are organized for network participants including training sessions, field trips, special speakers, picnics, potluck dinners, and photography contests just to name a few.

By using low-cost measurement tools, stressing training and education, and utilizing an interactive Web-site, the aim is to provide the highest quality data for natural resource, education and research applications.

CoCoRaHS has expanded rapidly with over 3,500 observers in 18 states.

Each time a rain, hail or snow storm crosses your area, volunteers take measurements of precipitation from as many locations as possible. These precipitation reports are then recorded on our Web site www.cocorahs.org. The data are then displayed and organized for many users to analyze and apply to daily situations ranging from water resource analysis and severe storm warnings to neighbors comparing how much rain fell in their backyards.

CoCoRaHS is used by a wide variety of organizations and individuals.

To become a volunteer, or for more information visit http://www.cocorahs.org/Application.aspx on the internet or contact Mitchell Erickson at mitchell.erickson@noaa.gov or call 605-341-9271.

How often should I get a Pap smear?

First Screening Pap:

Women should have a Pap test at least once every 2-3 years beginning about 3 years after they begin to have sexual intercourse, but no later than age 21. Experts recommend waiting about 3 years after the start of sexual activity to avoid over treatment for common, temporary abnormal changes. It is safe to wait 2-3 years, because cervical cancer usually develops slowly. Cervical cancer is extremely rare in women under age 25.

Women age 19 - 29:

Women between the ages of 19 and 29 need a Pap smear every 2 – 3 years, unless ordered more frequently by your clinician.

Women age 30 and over:

Women 30 and over should continue to have a Pap every 2-3 years unless ordered more frequently by a clinician.

Women age 65 and over:

Women who have had at least three normal Pap tests and no abnormal Pap tests in the last 10 years may decide, after talking with their clinician, to stop having Pap smears performed. If a woman has not had a pap in several years, a screening must be done. If she is at high risk for cervical cancer, frequent screenings may be necessary.

Women who have had a hysterectomy for non cancerous condition.

No further Pap smears are needed

Any questions, talk to your clinician or call the Women's Health Clinic at (605.747-2231.) We care about your health.

Our View

Language is important to the identity of a culture and to our youth

There has been a growing concern that the Lakota language is being slowly lost because we are failing to transmit it to the younger generation and that fact is being proven by recent statistics.

As we go about our daily affairs and plan for the fun our families are going to have during the upcoming pow wow season we all have this sense in the back of our minds that the language, Lakota language is important in some manner, but are just not quite sure who should be taking the responsibility for its survival.

The Oceti Wakan project in Calico community undertook the challenging task of surveying 8,000 members on the Pine Ridge reservation and will be sharing those results over the next several weeks. They warn that the Lakota language is in serious jeopardy of being lost. Their published some of the findings on page A3.

The statistics they gathered seem to bear out the fact that Lakota is not being learned in the early years in the Eagle Nest and LaCreek districts. They surveyed 352 people from both districts. For those 50 years of age and over, the statistics paint a much more hopeful picture as over half to 79 percent of those surveyed can speak Lakota. Also from 40 to 63 percent of all household surveyed have at least one person who can speak Lakota and that is a positive characteristic.

Those in the age categories of 17 to 49 provide a dismal snapshot of Lakota retention as only approximately 69 people understand and speak Lakota.

They will be publishing their results of the other districts in the near future. Language surveys are difficult to pinpoint real clear statistics because it's hard to assess the degrees of fluency and proficiency. It is sometimes advantageous when language assessments rely on a self report inventory as most people know where their language skills lie on a scale.

We don't have a lot of families who have a desire to learn and speak the language fluently or much less to teach their children. It goes back to desire and what is necessary for everyday survival

Knowing the language and culture is a power that gives us our identity as Lakota people. Language is power just as knowledge is power; it is what sets us apart as Lakota people.

It provides identity as a people and right now identity is important to our youth. It gives them strength and power within.

How do we combat the intergenerational and historical shame that is associated with speaking the language, how do we create desires in our youth to learn, and how do we break that shame?

Our schools and our colleges for the past 20 years or so have taken great strides to incorporate curriculum and criteria to teach and retain the language. Without that, our statistics would be higher.

The issues of fluency and language loss is slowly creeping up on all reservations and it is becoming a sign of declining cultural health of the people. It's a part of our identity that we should be transmitting to our youth.

Language acquisition and maintenance, furthermore, is a wonderful way for an indigenous nation to heal and practice that which has power and which promotes pride and resilience. We believe that the language will be revitalized and strengthened as there are still a good number Lakota speakers both from the Oglala and Sicangu Nations.

Go to any small community pow-wow and you will hear nothing but Lakota being spoken. Each of us needs to listen carefully to prayers, humor, teachings and many of the fluent pow-wow emcees who will be taking charge this pow-wow season.

In the past 10 years, we have seen a surge of more people, LAKOTA people participating in ceremonies, sweats and sun dances, where the language is at the center of healing.

A Lakota Perspective

Racism: educate our children to who they are

By Lydia Whirlwind Soldier

In my travels across the country I realize that the country is in transition in many different ways, especially in acknowledging the diversity that exists in this country. Different languages are spoken over intercoms in airports and large retail stores. Businesses look beyond race and ethnicity because their success is based on financial gain. There seems to be a decline in racism but I wonder how the state of South Dakota would rate if compared to other states.

As Native people we know that we face prejudice and discrimination in many ways and in many places in South Dakota, so much so that it is difficult to ignore. Recently my grandchildren and I stopped in for a sandwich at a tourist center in central South Dakota. White people walked in ahead of us apparently without notice, but as soon as we walked into the gift shop area a man who was working in the reservations area dropped everything and begin to follow and watch us. He even went as far as to move a display of earrings closer to a clerk waiting on a couple. With his arms folded on his chest, his feet spread apart and legs stiffly planted he watched our every move. Obviously, this person has negative views and has stereotyped all Indians as dishonest and as thieves.

This incident cannot be dismissed as simply an isolated and bad experience with one racist person. Bigotry may not be as blatant in some places but in other places it is obvious and still an outrage.

The Nation has ignored the realities of inequality when it comes to indigenous people. We have the highest unemployment rate. Our children's education is substandard. We have the highest push-out and drop-out rate with some schools investigated for discriminatory acts against our students. We do not have preventative health care. Many of our people are discriminated against when it comes to rental properties in towns and cities across this state and are forced to live in substandard housing. Statistics show that there is a disproportionate population of Natives in South Dakota prisons. It has been proven over and over that minorities receive harsher sentences than their white counterparts. This doesn't prove that we have more criminals in our society; it only proves that we do not have the finances to hire renowned and experienced lawyers.

It is not difficult to understand racism when it is experienced over and over. Racism is a disease and a legacy that has become a tradition in some families. It is a chronic infection that generates and contributes to dysfunctional political and social issues in this country. It seems dialogue between the races is not effective because many people are in the state of denial and will fiercely defend and justify their stand on how they view other races.

In order to combat racism we must began with our families and especially with our children. One solution is to educate our children to know who they are, to believe firmly in the value of our history, culture and language. We must teach them to understand our treaty rights, sovereignty and to maintain and value what is left of our homelands. Our challenge is to teach them not to internalize discriminatory acts committed against them and that discriminatory acts against them are illegal. We must teach them that they are not powerless but that they have the power to mold their futures. They must also learn to acknowledge, accept and appreciate cultural differences. This is an overwhelming and awe-inspiring task but it can be accomplished.

We have made great strides that would make our ancestors proud. We still struggle with racial discrimination but we are stronger in our identity because of those struggles.

There are some Lakota quotes that I have valued over the years. In taking walks with my grandparents I heard more than once, "Always look back to see where you have come from to keep from losing your way." Another was, "Remember you are Lakota and that you have come from a Nation of strong, proud and good people."

Finding My Voice

Confessions of a Lakota girl

Dana Badmilk

Ok when I decided to do this on confessions, it is because I want to cleanse my soul. I decided to go back to the first thing I wanted to confess. I realized I have a lot to confess. The roots of evil were planted long ago.

Anyway I will start at the age of 5 and this confession goes to my brother. When I told you to swing from that vine and yell like Tarzan, I knew it was a stereo, a big stereo from the 70s and I knew the vine was the cord. Hey you turned out ok and have an amazing tolerance for pain to your head, right?

To the little boy in first grade, Greg. When we moved to the city and you told everyone I was a "dirty Indian." I wrote your name all over everyone's desk with the crayons you stole from me. I stole them back and walked by after school to watch you scrub your name off the desks. I smiled when you cleaned after this "dirty Indian."

To another boy in first grade, Mark. When you kissed me on the playground and said you liked me. I am sorry I screamed, cried, and ran. I really did like you and your blue eyes and I think our children would have been beautiful.

In second grade, to my grandma, I took your poodle Mr. Bo Jangles or was it Jingles to school and he danced for everyone and then molested my friend's cat.

In fourth grade to my teacher Mr. Collins. Every time you turned your back I sent you death rays and death thoughts but my super powers were not fully developed. I heard you later passed and I am sorry if the powers wore you down.

In fifth grade, to our dearly departed neighbors. Your dog Puppy Joe did NOT crap that much in your yard. I and my brother had to pick up the crap in our yard with one of those long handled pooper scoopers and we parred up into your yard. Your roof was hole in one.

In sixth grade, this confession is to the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost. I only went to church because I had a crush on the Pastor's son. Forgive me.

In seventh grade, to my friend Missy, every time I had a crush on someone you and your Daryl Hannah looks made a play for them. So when I said I liked that butt ugly guy at camp with the same name as me, I only did it to make you go out with him while I crushed on the pastor's son. I thought it was funny to see you hold that ugly guy's hand though.

To all the girls at Bible Camp in the "Big Girls" dorm. It was me who put the frogs in your beds, purses, showers, and toilets. God wasn't dammning you and I was surprised to see that none of you noticed my bed and purse untouched and un frogged.

To my brother Trav again, when you gave me the Wrist Rocket sling shot to defend us against those "bad guys." You should have taught me how to aim. That dirt clod that blasted your head was me. But hey, it sent you into a rampage that scared them away.

To one of my best tippers when I bartended, Tony the Butcher. I never went on that second date with you because every time I said something you said "riiiiiiiiii-iiiiiiiight!" Like the Fonz said "Heeeeeey." You even said it when I purposely said something wrong. Hey thanks for all the meat, steaks and other stuff I and my kids enjoyed.

To my kids, sorry I make you get me the remote even when I am closer. My mom did it to me, it is a vicious circle.

To my mom and step dad, the red paint on the front of the van, that was me. I know you argued over it and blamed each other, but you made me take my brother dinner and yeah, that is all I will say.

To my brother Trav, I know you ain't with this chick anymore but when she asked who Susan was because you said it in your sleep, I didn't mean to tell her it was your ex, you guys should have told me you was all lying about it and in on it. I am not a narc.

And last but not least, to my brother Jesse, that one time, I was the one who wrote "Wash Me B----" in the dust on the hood of your car....but it gave it some charm. Oh yeah, and sorry to all the siblings that got blamed.

Ok I have to end there. I will not confess up anymore details to anything for fear of prosecution. I plan to take the 5th if there are any further questions. Oh I am free...the burden is off of me.

Cin'ca hoksila wana Lakol ocaje ki unkupi

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

We finally were able give Beaux his Lakota name and the gathering was good.

His paternal grandmother, Victoria, was present for the ceremony and we were grateful. His grandmother is in her 80's and does not like to be the subject of any discussion so I will leave it there.

I was also honored that Amanda and her granddaughter, Brittany Rose Poor Bear, were in attendance.

Brittany was quite popular as she sang a song in Lakota about the children and it was quite appropriate given that Beaux is a big kid also. Brittany got much words of encouragement from a couple of Vietnam veterans.

I come from a family that never conducted such honorings and so to actually put one on is a learning experience that taught me more than I really wanted to know. It was an emotional moment for me to see my little boy, who is taller than me, to be honored in such a way. I appreciate all of the family and friends that chose to come when they could have been out shopping or conducting their daily affairs. When I graduated from Harvard my dad could only say, "We born you good" and that was the extent of his congratulations. My mom said, "You done good" and I am sure she meant it.

I had several junctures in my life that were cause for celebration and I passed up the honor.

I can only explain that it wasn't a way of life that I am familiar with and so I just let it pass. I really think I will have my own secular 'wopila' dinner at some point to give thanks to many of the people that have supported me over the years professionally.

As I stood there with Beaux I realized that such a name giving is a way to lend him encouragement for the journey he is embarking on to get a higher education one day. Archie Little saved the day for us and sang several honoring songs, including a meal prayer song which I really appreciate.

He told Beaux before the ceremony outside that life is a rough journey and that he will need all the encouragement and support he can get.

At any rate, the whole event was an experience that taught me about the need to support Beaux in a cultural manner and some of the undercurrents that necessarily occur when adults have their own agendas.

Our precious children really are sacred and like a poker player who keeps his cards close to his vest, we need to keep our children close to our chest.

The best to you, ta'wicahpi ake' topa (has 14 stars) as your dreams will be fulfilled one day I promise.

You made us proud beyond words and I will be there for you always.

Notes From Indian Country

The poor Indians pay for the success of the rich

By Tim Giago (Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

John F. Kennedy said that the American Indian is the least understood and the most misunderstood of all Americans. I believe that with the disparities now so apparent in Indian country, that description by JFK takes on an entirely new meaning.

Headlines in many newspapers last week announced that Indian casinos had brought in a record $25 billion dollars last year. What they did not say is that on reservations such as the Navajo, Rosebud, Pine Ridge, Crow Creek, Blackfeet and Crow, unemployment is as high as 50 to 80 percent. That the average income is less than $5,000 annually. That the average life span is about 55 years of age. That the infant mortality rate is 3 times the national average. That on some reservations the diabetes epidemic claims 50 percent of the total reservation population. That many homes are without electricity or indoor plumbing. That there is such a need for housing that some of the available homes house as many as three families.

But nowadays the average American reads about the $25 billion raked in by the rich casino tribes last year and shrugs it off with distaste, probably with some envy and not without a little anger at all Indian tribes. In other words, the fantastic success of some gaming tribes is setting the agenda for all Indian tribes and it is making the very poor tribes the victims of the success of the rich tribes. Who would have ever thought they would see such a dichotomy in Indian country even 20 years ago?

In the Lakota language there is a word one hears quite often these days and that word is "onsika" (pronounced oon-she-ka) and it means poor, destitute or miserable, but as with many words in the Lakota language it also can mean to humble oneself to another, to act in a humble way, or to have mercy on those who have nothing. All of these definitions could describe the present conditions of the Lakota people.

We say that we are all in the same boat so although many have very little, it is still their duty to help those who have even less. That was true in all of Indian country prior to 1988 when gaming was legalized on Indian reservations, but that is not the case today. One rich tribe, the Mohegan, just purchased a golf course for $4. 5 million. Another tribe, the Seminole, just bought the Hard Rock Cafe and Resorts for a billion dollars.

Prior to 1988 when all of the tribes were "onsika" they all pulled together. There was actually unity in their poverty. Back then one could attend the annual convention of the National Congress of American Indians and meet tribal leaders that knew only poverty. They came to the convention in tattered jeans that were partially covered by a threadbare jacket or sports coat. When they addressed the convention they spoke with humility, sometimes in English peppered by words in their Native tongue. Now they show up in three-piece tailored suits.

I remember when we had our first Native American Journalists Convention in 1984 on the Warm Springs Indian Reservation in Oregon. Many of the editors of Indian newspapers raised the money to attend the convention by holding fry bread sales or local auctions. Some pooled their resources and caravanned to the convention. Students from the Oglala Lakota College on the Pine Ridge Reservation had bake sales and auctions and then, led by their instructor, Gemma Lockhart, piled into their cars and vans, some borrowed, to make it to the convention.

Perhaps some would think of those days as the "bad old days," but on many Indian reservations, those days are still here. And on those very poor reservations it is heartwarming to see that the very poor still have dignity in their poverty.

Last week I wrote about the poorest Indian tribes in America, with $863,286,767.90 now held in trust for them for the illegal taking of their sacred Black Hills, refusing to accept one single penny of that award.

That these people of the Lakota, Nakota and Dakota speaking tribes of North Dakota, Montana and South Dakota, though encumbered with extreme poverty and the many illnesses that accompany poverty, can still refuse to accept nearly one billion dollars that would go a long way into lifting them from their poverty, is a miraculous phenomenon that most of the casino rich tribes could never and would never understand.

As a matter of fact, nearly all of the responses to my column about the monetary award to the Sioux people were from Indians all expressing great pride and respect for a people that refuse to sell their mother earth. Wrote one, "In today's world of greed and money grubbing by too many Indian tribes and their people, it makes me so proud to see the Sioux stand tall and proud against the temptations of the money givers."

Perhaps one of the reasons I received no response from white people is that this may be one concept they find strange or maybe it is just something beyond their realm of comprehension. To be poor and not accept money, according to many, is not the American way. It is not the fault of the rich casino tribes that most Americans believe that all Indian tribes are rolling in wealth. They were lucky to be in a locale conducive to wealth and more power to them for their success.

The words uttered by JFK more than 40 years ago still ring true. The American Indian is still the least understood and the most misunderstood of all Americans.

Rapid City looking for Indian Ed coordinator to put education on the front burner

By Vicky Wicks
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY-The position of Indian Education coordinator in Rapid City schools is not slated for elimination, according to current school board president Margie Rosario, but the person hired for the job will be taking on grants administration for the school district.

Several community members spoke to the school board on Thursday, June 7, to express dismay at rumors that the Indian Education director was going to be cut or demoted from a cabinet-level position.

Some of those speaking were responding to information presented to them on Tuesday, June 5, at a meeting of the local Peace and Justice.

Elizabeth Cook-Lynn and Jay Davis, speaking on behalf of Peace and Justice, said the group reached consensus on four points:

The Indian Education program should be retained; the director should be a cabinet-level position; it should be funded with hard money instead of soft, or grant, money; and it should be advertised and filled immediately.

Rosario said that the rumors of program elimination were based on "partial truths," and that plans for the Indian Education position had not yet been solidified at the time of the Thursday evening meeting.

Contacted a few days after the school board meeting, Rosario said the job description for the director of Indian Education and grants has now been finalized, and the job opening will be posted soon.

Rosario explained the process of revamping not only the Indian Education directorship but also other assistant superintendent and director positions.

About two and a half years ago, the school district started examining efficiency of its administration and "decided to get someone from outside the system to evaluate the whole thing," in part to get an objective evaluation, Rosario said.

The district contracted with Technology and Innovations in Education (TIE), a nonprofit agency funded with federal money through the South Dakota Department of Education.

TIE looked at organizational charts, interviewed top and subordinate tiers of administration to determine if their actual jobs matched their job descriptions, and returned to the school district with recommendations, Rosario said.

TIE found that three to four assistant administrators and four to five directors were all answering to Superintendent of Schools Peter Wharton, whose duties took him out of his office quite frequently.

As a result, administration will now be restructured, so that assistant administrators, each overseeing a specific area, will answer to Wharton, and directors will answer to the appropriate assistant administrator, Rosario said.

Although directors no longer answer directly to the superintendent, they are still part of the cabinet, Rosario said.

The TIE audit indicated that the director of Indian Education and director of grants were not each 100 percent full-time obligations, and the duties had close ties, so the two positions were combined, Rosario said.

The new director "will be responsible for integrating cultural competencies and training" as well as supervising a grants coordinator, Rosario said. The position will also be supported by assistance from other directors as well as an accountant in the business office, she said.

"So the director of Indian Ed is not charged with writing every word [of grants]," Rosario said. "There will be a team underneath responsible for the day-to-day stuff."

The district will be looking for someone with the ability and training "to really put Indian Ed on the front burner," Rosario said, and she hopes "the Native community will see that we tried to elevate the position…so it takes its proper place in the scheme of things."

When the opening for the position of director of Indian Education is posted, it can be found, along with other job openings, at the following website:

Korean War vet Standing Bear posthumously honored

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

NORRIS - On any given day on the Rosebud reservation the summer months are filled with celebrations, ceremonies and other events that are often reflective of the diversity of events many have come to expect.

On Saturday morning, June 10 a solemn ceremony was held at the St. Paul Episcopal and continuing on to the Corn Creek park. Approximately 200 people came together including veterans to witness the posthumous awarding of military medals, an American flag and a U. S. Marine flag to Severt Standing Bear, Sr. who was a hero in the Korean War. Because of his heroic actions Standing Bear is being touted posthumously as a possible Congressional Medal of Honor recipient.

Many friends and relatives donating a lot of good food for the dinner in memory of Severt.

Sinte Gleska University Lakota Studies department instructors, Russell Eagle Bear and Francis Cutt were present while Francis served as the emcee for the event and the drum group Leca Wakan had the honor of singing the honoring and victory songs.

There were several dignitaries and visitors who made a special effort to make the trip because of their connection of Standing Bear. Retired Colonel Herbert Oxnam of Tucson, Ariz. presided over the gathering as the ranking member of the military while accompanied by his wife, who was also an officer during that time.

Retired corporal Jerry Ravino of Florida, a personal friend of Standing Bear and Sergeant Kamara served with Standing Bear in Colonel's Oxnam unit in Korea. They each took part in the ceremonies as did the South Dakota Marine Corps League color guard of Rapid City. A member of the color guard from Wyoming also participated. Ravino's family also included a young Boy Scout who raised donations for 1,000 white crosses for a memorial to Vietnam Veterans.

Many people from around the Rosebud reservation and Rapid City donated food and gifts in memory and honor of Standing Bear.

Herman and Sarah Standing Bear gave a star quilt to Cpl Ravino while Laverne Looking Cloud gave a quilt and caps to the Marine Corps League. Ron and Rosalie Little Thunder also presented quilts to the Oxnaml and Cpl. Ravino. Finally, Harvey and Linda Marshall gave a horse stick to the Colonel and Mrs. Oxnam.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I have a few questions for you what is my sister doing with my son's father? Is she trying to hurt me? What are his intentions of all this? Does he realize he's just getting me mad and does he realize he could affect his relationship with my son by doing all this! I mean what are they trying to prove. Did they have sex together? I mean now why does everything happen to me? Why are they using my son to get together I mean both of them claim they love my son but yet they're jeopardizing his relationship with his other family? And I know it's up to me to tell my son things but yet he's too small what am I going to tell him in the future, that OK son, your auntie is with your dad. I mean who in their right mind will ruin a relationship especially if you know it's going to hurt the other person that had no intentions of betrayal and did they have sex together?

Betrayed Sister

Dear Betrayed Sister:

I notice that your refer to your boyfriend as your son's father. That, by the way, is the manner that most women speak of their exes. Your son's father has not pledged himself to you with an everlasting agreement of marriage. There is probably a blessing within that arrangement because it sounds to me like the two of you have too many troubles between you to lay down the ground work of a good, strong, loyal relationship.

Now. Down to brass tacks. Quit screaming about what is being done to your son. Nothing is being done TO him. Your sister and your ex-boyfriend (that is the future truth), may eventually end up together. I don't like it either and I don't think that it is a good idea to date your sister or brother's ex boyfriends/girlfriends. It causes way too much trouble and hurts way to many people yet it is something that happens.

As far as your small son; it makes very little difference who your soon to be ex will be dating in the future. Who cares as long as he is a good father and that the woman he is with is a good person that treats your son with love and respect.

To try and blackmail your "son's father" into behaving with threatening him by destroying the respect your son has for him shows immaturity and very little common sense.

Why would you want to torture your son by belittling his father? What is the point except to release your anger?

I know you are outraged at this whole thing and I also understand that is an average reaction to a break in loyalty. The two of your (your boyfriend and you) will end your relationship because you don't trust him enough to let him out of your site.

If you stay in the relationship you will torture him with your doubt of his loyalty every day of his life. It isn't what a loving relationship is about.

I see you letting your son's dad go because you are too angry with him to recover your balance and live in a good way together. What is the point of screaming and yelling and being miserable together. Better to be happy and apart than self righteously angry and together.

Dear Anna,

I am writing you this letter because I have been thinking about my sister who passed away 20 years ago. Her death was unforeseen and she died at a young age (18). Her death is still unsolved as of this year. A friend told me that in time there would be justice for her death but its been 20 years and I just wonder about it.

I wonder too, if she's with my uncles and grandpa and niece in the Spirit World. You see, when she died I wasn't a parent yet and I want to know if she knows that she has nieces and nephews that wonder about her. If you make contact with her please tell her I haven't forgotten her and miss her dearly. it must be true; God does only take the best!!

Still Missing her Sister

Dear Still Missing Her Sister:

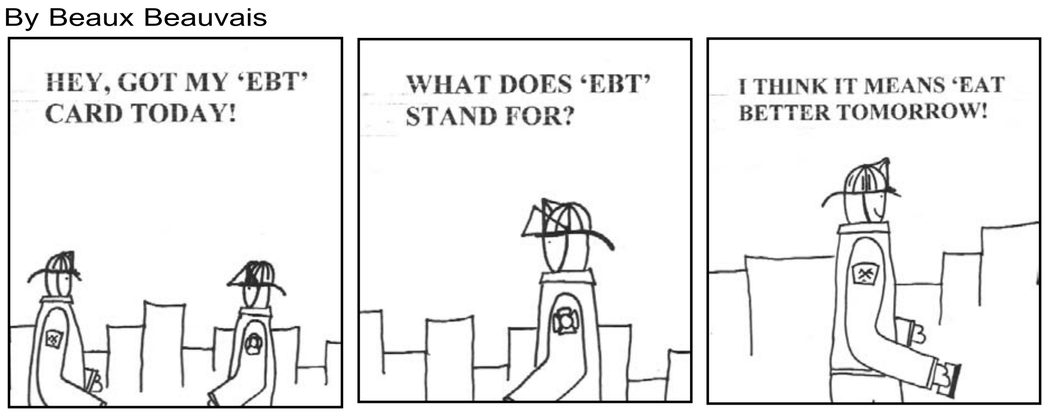
Yes, your sister is with all of the family members. She does visit you and others from time to time. She does watch out for your children. Remember, please, death is only physical.

God, by the way, not only takes the best, he takes us all.

She says to tell you this: "I am far from being over my life. I love you too. I wasn't that young in the Spirit World when I passed away. I have an old spirit.

I want you to know that I am okay. I have found some peace about my life. Thank you for the ribbons. I want you to hang on to your hair bows. I wasn't killed by a guy, it was a woman. That should change the way people look at things. There was a guy involved, but she set it up."

"Everything is okay from here. I am hanging around Julia. She is from a long time ago. Remember, I am not that far away, and I visit a lot, and I have been in your dreams three times now. Take care of yourself, you are beautiful."



You can email Anna Bee your questions at lakota1868@gwtc.net or fax to (605) 685-1870, or write to PO Box 386, Martin, S.D. 57551.

Could I have pre-diabetes?

Most people don't know if they have pre-diabetes. You could have prediabetes if:

- Someone in your family has diabetes.
- You weigh more than you should
- You had diabetes while you were pregnant (called gestational diabetes)
- You had a baby weighing over 9 lbs. at birth
- A doctor or nurse has said to you that you had a "touch of sugar" or "pre-diabetes"

Families win case against Winner School

WINNER - The Winner and Ideal Native American community and the Winner School District reached an agreement June 18 to settle a class action lawsuit brought on behalf of Native American students attending Winner schools.

"This groundbreaking settlement agreement is a major step toward ensuring that our children have the best educational opportunities possible," said Rodney Bordeaux, president of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe.

Catherine Kim, one of the attorneys for the American Civil Liberties Union representing the Native American families in this case, Antoine et al v. Winner School District, said, "Across the nation, education for Native American youth is in crisis. In Winner School District, Native American students drop out of school, transfer to other districts, or are sent to detention facilities at rates far higher than white students. We are pleased that the Winner School District has agreed to take proactive steps to support Native American students. It is our hope that the district can serve as a model for other communities serving minority students."

Rocky Blare, president of the Winner School Board, stated "Our Board spent two days in Sioux Falls, away from our families and jobs, in order to address the concerns that had been raised. Our goal was to act in the best way possible for all children of this district and

OST council tables ethics code, Little complaint and supports $4.3 million FEMA trailer plan unified fight for protection of Bear Butte backed by council

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - On Tuesday the Oglala Sioux Tribal Council met in Pine Ridge for a special session to deal mostly with judiciary committee initiatives; the council defeated a tabling motion 5-7 on a proposed ethics code but when the vote was run on the code itself, it was 6-6 and John Steele, tribal president, broke the tie because of the need for so many interpretations so it was defeated 7-6. A subsequent motion to return it to the finance committee so that it could be brought back to the July regular session which would give council representatives enough time to review it and to have their respective districts review it as well passed 7-4 with one not voting.

"There were just too many questions, especially on the part which stated that elected officials of the Oglala Sioux Tribe shall not serve on or be a member of any board, commission, executive board or any other governmental position of the Oglala Sioux Tribe or chartered organization that may engage in business with or have an interest in the governmental affairs of the tribe," said Steele as he cast the deciding vote against.

Cora Whiting serves on a state advisory board, Tom Conroy just got elected to the Shannon County School Board and Philip Good Crow serves on a number of boards, all were unsure how the proposed code would affect their involvement on their outside boards.

As prescribed by tribal ordinance, any complaint against a member of the council or executive board would be taken up before the regular agenda so the council considered the complaint brought to the council by the executive board of the Oglala District. After a discussion and advice from the chair about what constituted an impeachable offense, the council voted 9-3 to table the complaint against Jake Little, council representative from Oglala Whiteclay District until all 18 members of the tribal council were in attendance.

"I was really hoping to get this cleared up and we would be able to move ahead," said Little, "this could drag on for many months."

When the council met in May at the Prairie Wind Casino, Little made comments about the military and veterans that offended many vets and tribal members. According to Hilda Two Bulls the complaint included a petition signed by 320 enrolled members of the Oglala/Whiteclay district and asked for Little's removal. Little spent five and a half years in the military but questioned the need to support all veterans events while stating the money would be better used for education projects so our youth would not have to sign up for the military to have their college education paid for.

Paul Iron Cloud, a past tribal president and housing director and a member of Steele's management team led a presentation with Gary Ruse, past president of First National Bank in Gordon, Neb. on the possibility of bringing somewhere between 250 and 350 new FEMA trailers to Pine Ridge Reservation. A revenue bond put in place in 2003 could be redone to bring together $2.5 million, Rural Development could provide $1 million, the Bureau of Indian Affairs about $300,000 with a total of about $4.35 million to be cobbled together to bring 270-350 trailers at $16,000 each. A resolution made by Craig Dillon and seconded by Sonya Weston to support the initiative and to send a tribal delegation to inspect and tag the trailers for the tribe passed 11-0 with one not voting.

The council voted 12-0 to support an Adam Walsh Child Protection and

Prairie Hills Square country club and golf course renovates

RST liquor commission conducts inspection

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

MISSION - The RST liquor commission scheduled a walk-through inspection of the newly renovated Prairie Hills Square last Wednesday. The new owners Troy and Geena Heinert have been very compliant with the liquor ordinance which governs their exciting new business and, in fact, have taken the initiative to communicate with RST liquor commission chair, John Charles Arcoren when necessary.

The renovations have transformed the establishment into a rather trendy location to eat, drink and relax given the fact there is no other place on the Rosebud reservation that promises to have a full menu of steaks, hamburgers and other full menu items soon. Heinert says that they are waiting on the hood for the kitchen stove and will open the kitchen at that point.

The downstairs club house at the Prairie Hills Square golf club and steakhouse was newly renovated and includes all new furniture. Troy Heinert, owner of the newly opened Prairie Hills Square. Club members who pay dues have access to the area with the use of a key card.

Arcoren said that the liquor commission has been appreciative of the club's cooperation. He said, "He has invited me before he had on-sale and off-sales and has been very good about following the ordinance to be sure they were in compliance."

Patrons are greeted by a large split move on. Ongoing litigation for years would be detrimental to our main goal of educating kids. With this settlement, we have welcomed the opportunity to provide visibility into our disciplinary policies and our cultural diversity." The settlement arose out of a lawsuit filed in March 2006 by ten Native American families with children in the Winner schools. The court certified the suit as a class action on behalf of all Native American students in the Winner Middle and High Schools and their families. The lawsuit claimed that the schools discriminated against Native American students in disciplining them, were hostile toward Native American families, and took statements from students involved in disciplinary matters that were later used to prosecute them in juvenile and criminal courts. The school district denied any wrongdoing, but agreed to enter into settlement discussions, mediated by U.S. Magistrate Judge John E. Simko, so as to avoid time-consuming and expensive litigation.

Under the settlement agreement reached by the parties, the district will enact policies and practices to ensure that the rights of Native American students are not violated and to enrich the educational experience of all students. Among the key terms of the settlement are the following:

o School officials will not require students to write statements that can be used to prosecute them in juvenile or criminal court;

o The district will hire a full-time ombudsperson, nominated by the collective Native American community, to serve as a liaison between Native American families and school officials, especially on disciplinary issues;

o An educational expert will work with school officials and Native American families to set benchmarks on improving Native American graduation rates, reducing levels of suspension and school-based arrests, and improving the overall climate for Native American students, among other goals; the expert will also conduct periodic on-site visits to ensure compliance with the agreement and monitor progress toward the goals;

1. A committee of Native American parents and school officials will review all disciplinary incidents every quarter for racial disparities and, if disparities are found and cannot be explained, recommend policy changes to reduce such disparities;

2. The Interwest Equity Assistance Center, funded by the U.S. Department of Education, will provide trainings for Winner students on conflict resolution and trainings for teachers on unconscious racial bias and educational equity;

3. The schools will include Native American themes in the mainstream curriculum, in-school activities, and after-school activities. Additionally, the district will offer Native American Culture, History and Language class every year in the high school, taught by a Native American instructor.

Participants in the mediation included Native American families named in the class action lawsuit, members of the Winner School Board, the superintendent, and two school principals. The families were represented by the national ACLU and the ACLU of the Dakotas, and Dana L. Hanna, an attorney based in Rapid City. Additionally, the Rosebud Sioux Tribal Council and the Rosebud Sioux Tribal Education Department provided assistance and facilitation. The Winner School District was represented by Gunderson, Palmer, Goodsell & Nelson, LLP, in Rapid City.

Hanna said, "We appreciate all the support that was provided to the attorneys and the Indian families by Rosebud Sioux tribal president Rodney M. Bordeaux and the Rosebud Sioux tribal council. The case was six years in the making and the tribal government supported us all the way."

The settlement agreement will remain in effect until the district substantially complies with its terms for four consecutive years. The federal district court will have jurisdiction over the agreement during this period. The parties will be submitting a proposed consent decree to finalize the settlement, and the court will next consider any objections and decide whether to approve it.

Heat shuts down KILI Radio temporarily over weekend

PORCUPINE - Late Friday afternoon, during a late spring heat wave, KILI Radio shut down to protect its new transmitter. On Monday morning KILI went back on the air.

"We have not been able to get our new air conditioning units installed before the heat really hit," said KILI station manager, Melanie Janis, "we are looking at mid to late week to get in either a used unit temporarily or our new unit; we need to keep the temperature down in the transmitter room toprotect our new equipment."

After a bolt of lightening knocked the station off the air in April of 2006, the Pine Ridge reservation based 100,000 watt station went back on with low power in June of 2006 and went back on with new equipment in March of 2007. A new digital transmitter has yet to be installed as well as a new-grounding system.

"We are really glad to be back on the air and back on in Rapid City at 88.7, we just need to work through all of the paperwork to get our vendors paid and finish up the equipment renovation project," said Janis.

level building with the hours for off-sale beer sales prominently posted for all to see. The top level is sporting a new floor with brand new tables, a pool table and chairs and the bar is on the east wall where customers may sit. There are two smaller flat screen televisions on the east wall, while a larger one has been installed on the south wall. Joyce Cook who previously operated a restaurant in downtown Mission is tending to customers and she noted that the kitchen staff is ready to roll once the kitchen is up and running.

Arcoren carried the RST liquor ordinance with him and referenced Section 10-2-10 which authorizes the commission to visit anytime. On such walk-through inspections or other spontaneous visits the commission is charged with the responsibility of looking for infractions as noted in the ordinance. Such infractions as under age drinking, serving someone who is excessively intoxicated and an examination of the liquor purchases to ensure that they are from a dealer licensed to do so.

The lower level is essentially the club house for which Prairie Hills takes memberships ranging from a single membership to families. The facility reflects the major renovation efforts which apparently went into creating a first rate club house that also allows children entry at certain points.

There are also flat screen televisions that keep one occupied while four large leather chairs dominate the middle section and which surround a coffee table. Both upstairs and down offer a lot of natural lighting from the outside and one could almost conduct a meeting using the coffee table and comfortable chairs if needed.

On this evening Heinert sat with Arcoren in the office and explained that he has just finished a state and nationally certified course in alcohol handling. He said, "This lets me train all my employees in South Dakota law and who can serve. They gave us signs to post and how to look for fake ID's."

There are six full time and seven part time employees and most are enrolled tribal members as Heinert had promised prior to the opening. He noted they have security personnel on the premises; however, they are not there to intimidate customers. He said, "We look for someone with people skills." There are also eight cameras and motion detectors to protect the property which also includes six golf carts for rent and 110 acres of land for nine holes of golf.

The new Praire Hills Square establishment promises to be a great alternative to traveling to the next state when the kitchen opens for business and locals are wanting a full menu when dining out. Heinert says they will also be serving a lunch menu of soup and sandwiches. He said, "It is scary to think about all of the regular customers coming here for lunch."

The liquor commission will conduct other inspections in the future as needed and when there is more of a crowd in evidence.

LAKOTA LANGUAGE SURVEY RESULTS

Oceti Wakan, a small non-profit, in Calico Community on the Pine Ridge Reservation has been doing a systematic house to house survey in each of the nine Districts on Pine Ridge Reservation to see the health of the Lakota language on our reservation. This has been funded by an ANA (Administration for Native Americans) grant. Last week reported Eagle Nest District and La Creek District representing 1,729 tribal members. There have been over 8,000 people who have been surveyed on the Reservation. Oceti Wakan mission is for the preservation of Lakota language and culture. We have developed books and CDs on both.

We would like to share with the community the results for each District with the people. As you will be able to see, we are in serious jeopardy of losing the Lakota language. We hope these results that we will be publishing over the next several weeks will help us break the denial of just how serious this is.

Pass Creek District Lakota Language Survey Results
180 households were surveyed with 649 tribal members.

0-6 years old (151 children) 4 children can speak the Lakota language – 3%
7-17 years old (215 children & youth) 20 can speak the Lakota language - 10%
18-29 years old (161 people) 29 can speak the Lakota language – 19%
30-49 years old (167 people) 91 can speak the Lakota language – 55%
50 years old and older (92) 65 can speak the Lakota language – 71%

We also surveyed the number of people who can understand the Lakota language but can not speak it. The following are the results:

0-6 years old (151) 0 children can understand the Lakota language – 0%
7-17 years old (215) 4 can understand the Lakota language – 2%
18-29 years old (161) 13 people can understand the Lakota language – 8%
30-49 years old (167) 17 people can understand the Lakota language – 10%
50 years old and older (92) 8 people can understand the Lakota language – 5%

92% of all households have at least one person that speaks Lakota

Medicine Root District Lakota Language Survey Results
139 households were surveyed with 786 tribal members.

0-6 years old (88) 4 children can speak the Lakota language –5%
7-17 years old (167) 4 children and youth can speak the Lakota language – 2%
18-29 years old (104) 13 people could speak the Lakota language – 12%
30-49 years old (162) 70 people could speak the Lakota language – 43%
50 years old and older (108) 75 people could speak the Lakota language – 69%

The numbers of people who can understand the Lakota language but can't speak it are:

0-6 years old (88) 19 children can understand the Lakota language – 21%
7-17 years old (167) 32 can understand the Lakota language – 19%
18-29 years old (104) 28 can understand the Lakota language – 27%
30-49 years old (162) 49 people can understand the Lakota language – 30%
50 years old and older (108) 21 people can understand the Lakota language–20%

62% of all households have at least one person that speaks the Lakota

Next week we will give you the results of Pine Ridge District and Porcupine District. Oceti Wakan has been meeting with the elders and in District meetings about creating a "VISION" for our long term language goal. WE NEED MORE INPUT TO CREATE THIS VISION! We want to ask anyone who has a part of the answer on what we can do to change this and to make this vision a reality to call us.

We welcome your input to create this "Vision". Please respond to us at:
Oceti Wakan
PO Box 1958
Pine Ridge, SD 57770
or email @ Oceti@gwtc.net.

We will publish the results of that when we have given all communities and members a chance for their input. Thank You.

We would like to hear from you!

SDSU, USD basketball coaches bring college game to Pine Ridge

Summer camps offer young athletes opportunities to improve

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - For the second time in three years, South Dakota State's head men's basketball coach, Scott Nagy brought his coaching staff and players to Pine Ridge Reservation. Nagy, his assistant coaches Deryl Cunningham and Rob Klinkefus and players Mike Loney, Mark Engen, Mohamed Berte and Mackenzie Casey wrapped up their two day camp Thursday. Individual skills development in basketball were offered to 48 kindergarten to sixth grade youngsters in the afternoon and to 30 boys and girls in grades 7-12 in the evening.

Negotiations have been ongoing to bring University of South Dakota head men's basketball coach, Dave Boots and his staff and a couple of players to Red Cloud High School July 2 and 3.

"This offers us a great opportunity to bring SDSU basketball to different parts of the state," said Nagy, "we like to get out and work with ball players from all parts of the state, we were in Kadoka earlier this week."

If arrangements are worked out, this will be USD's first trip to Pine Ridge Reservation; the camp will be for boys and girls with the first session set for 12 noon to 2:30 p.m. for grades 2-8 and the second session going from 2:30-5 p.m. for students in grades 9-12.

"It's a great to get out west, to have a chance to evaluate young ballplayers and to showcase some of our outstanding players from South Dakota," said Joey James, USD assistant coach, "we have had a lot of success here at USD and we want to share that with the fine people of South Dakota."

In addition to head coach, Dave Boots and assistant coach Joey James, Chris Kassin, another assistant will come as well and players Steve Smith and Mitch Begeman who played at Sioux Falls O'Gorman and Dylan Grimsley who came to USD from the University of Northern Iowa.

Red Cloud has scheduled their own basketball camp for girls and boys set for June 18-21 and June 25-28. grades 1-8 will go 1-4 p.m. each day and grades 9-12 will go 6-9 p.m. each evening. Basketball fundamentals, skill development, games and contests will all be featured over the two week camp. For information call Matt at 441-3823.

According to Little Wound staff, there will be a boy's and girl's basketball camp in July, no date has been set as of yet.

"Summer camps offer an opportunity for our young athletes to get to know a sport better, a sport that they enjoy," said Matt Rama, Red Cloud head boy's basketball coach, "for high school students, it offers opportunities to improve their skills, especially in fundamentals and different parts of the game like ball handling, shooting, defense or rebounding especially if they are thinking about going to college and participating in a sport."

The camps at Red Cloud are individual skills camps; high school varsity and junior varsity teams have the opportunity to play in team camps, leagues and tournaments as well during the off-season

Pine Ridge and Red Cloud have a girl's high school team in the league at St. Thomas More in Rapid City and the Red Cloud boys are playing in the Black Hills High School basketball league hosted by Rapid City Stevens. Pine Ridge girls and Little Wound boys are getting ready for the Native American Basketball Invitational tournament July 8-14 in Phoenix; playing as the South Dakota Basketball Divas, Pine Ridge took second last year.

In addition to the league in Rapid City, Red Cloud boys have participated in team camps at the University of South Dakota in Vermillion, Hill City high school and McCook Community College and will travel to Creighton University in Omaha this weekend. Between the camps and the league, Red Cloud is 22-0 this summer with another 30 games planned before the end of July.

In addition to local camps, there are a number of summer camps offered by surrounding colleges and universities including: SDSU Big Man/guard specialty and competitive camp June 18-21 call 688-4433 for more information; football team camps July 16-18 with a junior/senior advance camp on July 19; USD Football 11 man team camp July 8-10, 11-13, 18-20 and eight and nine man team camp July 15-17; Black Hills State University Basketball Skill Development and Competition camp June 17-20 grades 3-12, perimeter and post position camp June 20-22 and a team camp June 22-24 call 642-6607; the Black Hills Distance running camp with sprint/hurdles and pole vault on July 25-28; football camps July 8-11, call 642-6036; girl's basketball team camp June 15-17 and volleyball July 9-11 for grades 1-8 and July 16-18 for grades 9-12 and July 19,20 for Summer Slam team camp, call 642-6885; at Chadron State College basketball skills camp June 27-30 for grades 4-10, call 308 432-6348, track and field camp June 24-26; Northern State University in Aberdeen with Basketball shooting and scoring camp boys July 8-10 and girls July 15-17, Perimeter and post play camp for boys July 10-12 and girls July 17-19 and boys high school team camps July 12-14 and girls July 19-21; wrestling for grades 6-12 June 24-26 and youth camp under sixth grade June 27 and 28.

"It has really been special to do a camp in Mackenzie Casey's home town," said Nagy, "we know he has been a very positive role model to young athletes all across the state in particular to Indian Country, Mackenzie has been a really positive asset to our team over the last three years."

Rodeo cowboys to be honored

KYLE - There will be a honoring ceremony for eight rodeo cowboys on Tuesday, June 26 at Little Wound School gym at 5 p.m.

Those honored will be INFR barebacker rider, Chad Brunsch and Grady Brunsch; Joe, Jesse and Rolli Wilson from Kyle, Jeremy and Luke Meeks from Wanblee, and Shilo Amiotte, 17, who is leading in the NIFR tour.

Community is invited to attend, there will be entertainment and food. Call Ruth Brown at 462-6638 or 454-5273.

LeBeau returns to coaching, hired to guide Lady Thorpes

LeBeau

PINE RIDGE - After spending the last four years in the stands, Dusty LeBeau is set to return to coaching for the 2007/2008 school year with the Lady Thorpes at Pine Ridge high school. Dusty last coached during the 2003/2004 school year when he led both the boy's and girl's basketball teams from Pine Ridge to the state tournament, the Lady Thorpes took second to Sisseton in the 2004 State A championship game.

"When my wife Tess got sick, I stepped down from coaching to spend more time with her and after she passed away in October of 2005, I really didn't feel like doing anything;" said LeBeau, "now, I feel like I'm ready to go, I feel I have enough knowledge to get those girls to the next level. Bill Mendoza did a good job but when I heard he was going back to school, I remember how down those girls looked after they lost in last year's district championship and I figured I could help them."

Dusty started as a head coach in high school at Red Cloud with the girls in 1987 and over 15 years as a boys coach and 12 years as a girls coach he has compiled an overall 452-149 record with a 274-85 for the boys and a 178-64 for the girls. He has taken 16 teams from three different high schools to the state tournament. On the boys side, he won the state championship with Red Cloud in 1995 and his boy's state tourney teams include Red Cloud in 1990 (runner-up), 93 (third), 94, 95 (championship), 96 and 97; Little Wound in 1999 and 2000 finishing fourth both years and Pine Ridge 02, 03 and 04.For the girls, Dusty took Red Cloud to state in 1987, 1991(runner-up), 92 (third) and 95 (5th) and Pine Ridge in 2004 finishing second.

Although the school asked him to consider taking both the boys and the girls positions, he stated he has a mild heart condition and could handle the girls team. LeBeau works during the school year at Pine Ridge as a counselor tech and assists with attendance, grades, transcripts, a little of everything, he said.

"I'm back" said Dusty LeBeau, "If I do good I might continue; I still feel I can give young kids something."

The Little Tipi Casino Train that "could!"

Connie Smith-Blanco

Last Friday morning, the train finally left the station with the Oglala Lakota Nation officially on board for the ride! The new Prairie Wind Casino and Hotel is now open for business and amid flag waving, drum music, singing, praying, hand clapping, political cheering, sweating, and smiling faces, the ribbon was cut to the entrance of the new casino.

Melanie Janis and Kili Radio broadcast the historical event and Amanda and I shared the same table and watched everyone on and off stage take their well deserved bows. Frank "PoPo" Means was the proud MC and he took the crowd down memory lane to that fateful time in 1992.

In 1992 tribal members, many still living and some now in the spirit world, got tired of talking about a casino on the Pine Ridge reservation. They got tired of hearing how other Indian Tribes had found a solution to some of their everyday living problems.

When they'd finally heard enough they decided that this solution could possibly be Pine Ridge reservation's solution to the grinding, unending poverty and unemployment that was a normal part of everyday, reservation life.

With heads bent in thought and prayer and hearts ablaze with Lakota Spirit, little dreams began their journey to becoming big plans and hopeful ideas.

Yes, it was possible to build a casino on the Pine Ridge reservation. And yes, while they were at it, how about adding the dream of the Lakota people owning and running that casino themselves? They could, and they would, and they did!

There are more stories than storytellers about the little tipi casino, that despite all odds, would one day be a brick and mortar monument to those long ago blazing hearts. It's beautiful, it's proud and it is the Lakota people's solution to living in a wasicu world.

Last Friday those early and present-day dreamers and movers and shakers were honored on that windy stage in front of the Prairie Wind Casino and Hotel.

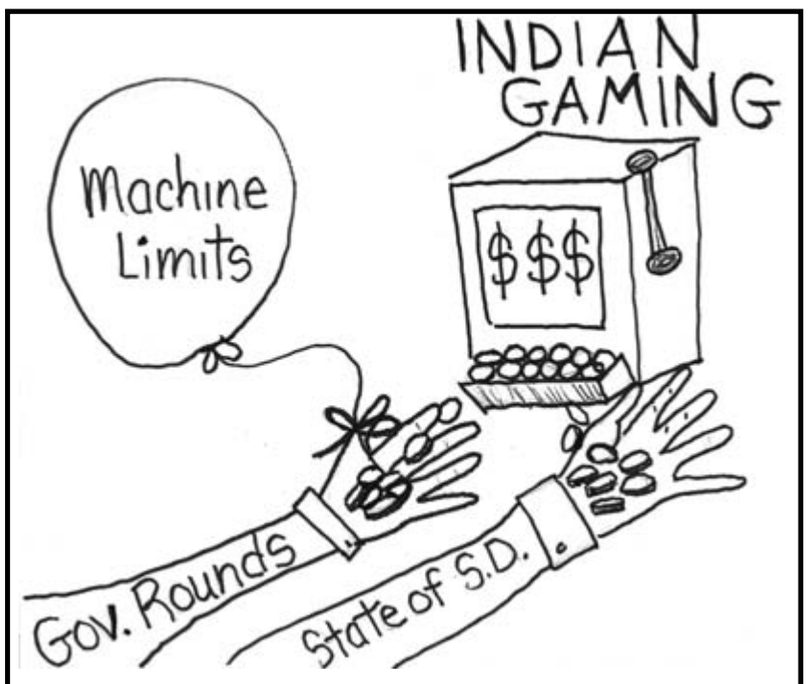
Their achievements did not go unnoticed, despite the long years of patient drudgery up and down that path pebbled with the starts and stops and stalls of hard work. The stories were as wonderful and windy as the storytellers and the beautiful outdoor weather.

Casino manager Michael Graham and all the hardworking employees who have made the casino a hard fought reality were cheered and honored.

Every Prairie Wind Casino employee deserved credit. And Lupe Hudspeth and her great marketing team of Deanna, Sharon and Bridget deserve credit for the week-end of non-stop fun. They put on an unforgettable show with free music concerts, free comedy concerts, free mouth watering food, and free t-shirts in all sizes including XXXL!

What more could a faithful casino goer ask for? Nothing, absolutely nothing. The train is leaving the station and I plan to ride that train as long and as far as my future oxygen tank and walker will take me.

The honoring and back slapping will soon be over.



And it will then be time to take the reins of this beautiful, spirited horse and gallop on into the future making way for even better, windier stories for me to tell my grandkids, who in turn will repeat them to their grandkids.

Many more success stories will be told about the little tipi casino that grew up and became the Prairie Wind Casino and Hotel.

The Hotel is now officially open for reservations, just Call 1-800-705-9463, it's called the Prairie Winds Casino and Hotel. A big thank you to all those dreamers, planners, and doers from here in the trenches.

Our leaders need to give their word and keep it

Dear Editor:

In Lakota society, those who acted as judges to resolve disputes were elders and those who had earned the respect of the people.

In main stream society, you can't get to be a judge without some measure of worthiness and expertise. Since the 80s, our court has had a reputation for expertise and credibility because we have had law trained people as judges. Until now, we have also provided our people with expertise representation in the public defender and prosecutor's offices.

Reservation courts have always been bombarded with threats and interference from tribal councils. Rosebud has managed to avoid such interference because our judges have always taken a stand against it.

Last year, the tribal council took another step forward and passed an ordinance that forbid council members from interfering with judges' decisions. The ordinance failed to include a provision to keep council from interfering through manipulation of contracts and salaries. The old saying goes, "Whoever has the money has the power," and council continues to exercise that power.

Salaries at the court have always been limited by the funds provided in the 638 contract. From time to time we have had prospective employees who bypassed the chief judge and court administrator to get contracts that overextended the budget. Several years ago, the court set up a wage scale to ensure that everyone was paid according to education and experience and that the budget would not be over fun. Recently, the council decided to over ride the wage scale and gave a contract for $300 a day, which far exceeds the salaries of all court personnel including law trained people.

The person has no legal education and I'm not sure he ever went to college. He was hired after they refused to hire a lawyer for that pay and no other qualified person would take the job.

He must have powerful friends on the council. It's interesting that every councilman I talked to said they didn't know anything about this man's contract. That indicates to me that they voted on a contract without knowing what was in it or that they have ulterior motives.

The tribal council has never supplemented the court budget and the people have now gone for months without LEGAL representation in the public defender's office.

Paying someone a higher salary does not provide proper representation.

The people deserve the very best we can provide and they're not getting it. The failure to provide representation also extends to the multitude of victims of crime on our reservation.

A few months ago, council hired several more police officers and failed to realize that the prosecutors would also need more staff. Insufficient staff in the prosecutor's office results in inadequate protection of victims.

When will the council wake up and realize they have a responsibility to provide JUSTICE and that responsibility is greater than their need to get re-elected.

With elections approaching, I ask the people to take a close look at the candidates this year and determine how much integrity they have.

In my opinion, honor and integrity are severely lacking in our tribal council. Contracts without a waiver of sovereign immunity are not worth the paper they are written on. What matters the most are your political relationships.

Not only is that wrong, it only adds to white society's view that tribal courts are kangaroo courts. I saw first hand that even when they offer a contract, if you turn your back, they will renege.

Two years ago, I was hired and sworn in as a judge and within five minutes after I left the room they voted to re-advertise the position.

They actually were going to hire a non-member who was a two-year law school graduate because ex convicts don't like my personal opinion that felons should not be allowed to run for council.

That's a clear message that neither council nor judiciary committee thinks that qualifications are important when someone is making life-changing decisions for the people.

In spite of that, I continued to work as a temporary employee for two more years because no one else applied.

I finally got tired of working without any sick or annual leave and resigned. I am a tribal elder and deserve better treatment than that.

Our failure to produce courts that are separate from tribal government and failure to honor contracts, employee or business, results in distrust of tribal government overall.

Outside entities including the businesses we are trying to attract are reluctant to do business with a government that fails to protect everyone.

The people want a return to traditional government, but it will not work until we can trust our leaders to give their word and keep it.

Wopila to those who help make healthy events successful

Dear Editor:

With much appreciation and wopila to the following programs and those individuals who were contacted to assist with contributions and donations of refreshments, food, bottled water, flowers/roses, bags, caps/visors and t-shirts for the Mother's Day Walk that was held on May 13 at Porcupine.

There were 60 plus walkers ranging from babies to beautiful and wonderful grandmothers, mothers, aunties, nieces, daughters and takojas on this very special day Mother's day to Oyate Blihelya Charlie Standing Bear for the bottled water, ONTRAC Juanita Scherich for the roses, LOWO Susan Dubray for the roses. Public Safety was given the request and one individual responded, Rick Mousseau for the cause of oranges, Public Health Nursing was given the request and one Public Health Nurse responded, Mary Mousseau for the case of apples, CHR Program, Marilyn White for the grapes, oranges, bananas and apples, Porcupine Clinic Board and staff for the use of their building, Paul Krizek, Running Strong for American Indian Youth for the beautiful and awesome t-shirts, OST Health Education, Mary Tobacco, Arlene Iron Cloud, Elaine (Worm) Yellow Horse and staff for the yummy roast beef, wheat bread and veggie tray as well as the bags, visors/caps.

To Marilyn Ruby Dodge, Suzanna Kills Back, Brian Dodge, Priscilla Buckman and her daughter, Sarah Buckman, for helping to set up, distribute items and the clean up.

It takes collaboration, network and communication and dedication so healthy activities such as these walks can be successful.

Widow needs help

Dear Editor,

Jacky Dreamer has a long road ahead of her. She's raising her five children on her own in Rapid City and she has bills and rent to pay. Times are hard and she must clothe and feed them on a very limited income. She is working to make ends meet. She wants to save money for emergencies.

Her husband, Gabe Dreamer, Sr., died in June of 2006 and left her to support their children. Gabe was from Oglala on the Pine Ridge reservation and his death came to all of us as a tragic loss. Some of his family still can't believe he is gone and are waiting for him to come home. Gabe said he was coming home.

Others in his family have accepted his death as a part of life and are building on his legacy by not forgetting Jacky and their children. They know that death is a process of healing and forgiveness. They know she is determined to raise her family in the best way she can.

With the right employment she plans to open many doors of success for the future of her precious and beautiful children. If there is a business in Rapid City who would hire her and give her this opportunity, her worries would end.

This letter is asking everyone in the Northern Plains to help Jacky and her children financially in any way possible. Contact Jacky Dreamer at 102 Waterloo St. #313, Rapid City, SD, 57701.

Gabe was a hard worker and he believed in providing for his family with a Lakota heart of generosity and honor. He isn't coming home and it is our duty to help Jacky and their children fulfill all of their goals and reach their destinations.

Finding My Voice

Embracing precious moments

Dana Badmilk

I once wrote in my blog about my friend Nate and how he described a moment as being "badass."

Sometimes there are times like that in life where everything is just badass. Maybe it's only seconds or minutes long but it's there, right then and now.

It happened to me on Fathers Day.

I was cooking out for my brother, my uncle, my husband, and his friend for Father's day. The steaks were on the grill. You could smell them.

My husband and his friend were singing one of their songs that my brother requested. A thunderstorm had just passed and some of the clouds were clearing away. It smelled like rain and it was still slightly and steadily raining. The sun was setting up the hill with beautiful coloring and the sunshine was reflecting every raindrop so it sparkled. My kids and my brother's kids were lighting fireworks and laughing in the back yard. I looked up the hill at the rain because it was so beautiful and a little girl with black hair to her waist was running up the hill laughing as a dog chased her.

It lasted a whole 30-40 seconds tops.

I forgot that I have a phone bill overdue, beadwork orders backed up, and a car that needs fixing.

I may live in the poorest county in the country and this neighborhood may be ghetto as all hell.

But those few seconds right then and there were just beautiful and "badass."

You have to take those moments like that when they happen and embrace them, because they are rare and they let you know for a few seconds, that everything in your world is alright.

Notes From Indian Country

The 'Great Horse' of the Pawnee Nation

By Tim Giago
(Nanwica Kciji)
© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

There is a well-kept graveyard in the rolling, green hills on the outskirts of Pawnee, Oklahoma. There lie the graves of the fallen warriors and women of the Pawnee Nation. In one corner is the headstone of an Indian scout identical to the government issued headstones found in Indian cemeteries across America to honor the scouts who served the U. S. Army during the Indian wars of long ago.

On this beautiful June day fluffy white clouds float slowly over the graveyard and the afternoon sun reflects off of the large tombstone bearing the names of Mary and Charles George Shunatona. He was known as Chief Shunatona to the many friends he made in his 84 years on this earth.

On the back of the tombstone is the family name of the Shunatona clan. It reads, "Great Horse," and there is a story behind the name. Told to me many years ago by Charles this is how the story goes:

"One day long ago while the warriors were away from camp hunting, only the women, children and a few elders remained in the camp. A young boy spotted enemy warriors approaching and he raced back to the camp to warn them. The only way to safety was to cross the river now swollen and crashing from the melting snow and spring rains. An elderly man told the boy who brought the news of the enemy to get the great horse that stood grazing at the edge of the camp. He then summoned all of the people together and they followed him as he led the horse to the edge of the raging river. In the Otoe language he told the horse to start across the river and he held out his hand to the boy who in turn held out his hand to a woman and so it went until all of the people held hands tightly as the mighty horse pulled them all across the river to safety."

The elderly Otoe man was the great grandfather of Chief Shunatona and so that is why the name "Great Horse" is etched on the gravestone at Pawnee.

More than 30 years ago I was about to begin hosting a weekly television show on KEVN-TV in Rapid City, S. D. I wanted the show to have an Indian theme song. I knew of only one man that could give me that song and his name was Charles Shunatona. Chief Shunatona was known all across Indian country for his mastery of the flute. I visited him one spring day in Wichita, Kansas. His wonderful daughter Gwen, then an assistant dean at Stanford University in California, was my hostess.

Charles asked me a few questions about my television show, about its format, and then he told me he would have a theme song ready for me by the end of the week. He was true to his word and a couple Sundays later, when my show made its debut, we had taken a Lakota pipe, hung it from the ceiling with black thread against a black background, filled it with tobacco and lit it, touched it gently so that it would appear to be floating in the air with smoke drifting from its bowl, and then came the beautiful tones of an Indian flute enriched by the deep voice of Chief Shunatona telling the story of the flute. In this way my new show, "The First Americans" was introduced to the people of Western South Dakota on December 15, 1976.

All of these memories came back to me as I looked at the headstone of Charles and Mary Shunatona last week. His daughter Gwen was once again my hostess and she delighted in showing me around the campus of the new Pawnee Nation College located on the grounds of the old Bureau of Indian Affairs boarding school.

I never cease to be amazed at the outrageous optimism of the Indian people. Through the eyes of Gwen Shunatona, George Howell, the president of the Pawnee Nation, Elizabeth Blackowl, Todd Fuller, president of the Pawnee Nation College, Deb Echo-Hawk, Les Hand, Roberta Gardipe, and Dawna and Charlie Hare, they see a beautiful college campus developing like a Phoenix rising from the ashes of a boarding school that has been closed for 40 years.

The old Pawnee Boarding School was built at the turn of the 20th Century to house and educate the Indian children of the Pawnee, Otoe-Missouria, Kaw, Ponca, Tonkawa and Shawnee. Not only would the children be educated, but they would also cease to be Indians. The BIA policy of "Kill the Indian; save the child" would see to that. The school eventually became known as "Gravy U" by the children in honor of the watery gravy that was served at every meal.

Through my eyes I saw buildings that were ancient and in disrepair. I saw that it would require millions of dollars to restore the buildings (You can see what the campus looks like today by Googling Pawnee Indian School). But I could not help but be uplifted by the unvarnished enthusiasm of Gwen, George Howell, Todd and the other school board members. Gwen returned to the land of her people to pursue this dream and George returned to his homeland from a life as an administrator for the Indian Health Service in order to help make the dreams of his people a reality.

Pawnee Nation College is a dream that, with the help of the American people, can come true. A couple of miles away, beneath a beautiful headstone with the words "Great Horse" carved upon it, Chief Shunatona and his wife Mary, wait, watch and share the optimism and enthusiasm of the people of Pawnee, Oklahoma and today I join them in their shared hopes and dreams that one day there will rise from the ashes of "Gravy U," a college that will grab the tail of the "Great Horse" and be pulled along the path to safety and success.

Judge denies stay, uranium drilling to continue

RAPID CITY - South Dakota Circuit Court Judge John Delaney denied a motion for a stay to stop any further drilling by a Uranium mining company near Edgemont. Opposing parties are considering state Supreme Court appeal.

Powertech, a Canadian mining company, began drilling uranium exploratory wells in the Dewey Burdock area northwest of Edgemont a few weeks despite the approval of their permit being appealed in court. Two environmental organizations, Defenders of the Black Hills and ACTion for the Environment are appealing the decision made by the South Dakota Board of Mining and Environment. Cindy Gillis, lead counsel for the two groups had previously sought a preliminary injunction and a restraining order. Judge Delaney denied those requests and said a "stay" was the proper procedure, and one was filed on April 30.

A hearing was held on June 19, in the Pennington County Courthouse and the Judge denied the stay, stating there was not enough environmental information to show harm to the plaintiffs.

Charmaine White Face, coordinator for Defenders, said, "This appeal is about the violation of our Constitutional rights. Our concerns about the environment were not even considered by the Board during the first hearing in January," she said. "That's why we appealed their decision in the first place. We are not even to the environmental questions yet."

Attorney Gillis raised the point in court that Powertech will have all their exploratory wells finished before the hearing on the permit can occur. Judge Delaney stated that even though a number of procedural violations were committed by the Board and the State Department of Environment and Natural Resources, he now had the authority to make the decisions and this was his decision.

The Board's Hearing Chair, Lee McCahren, on Jan. 17, 2007, signed the Findings of Fact, Conclusions of Law and Order that were prepared by Max Main, the attorney for Powertech. This was prior to the Board hearing the oral objections on Jan. 18 at which no court reporter was present. The process also allowed for written objections to be submitted within 30 days after the Hearing. The two groups submitted their written objections, and their objections should have been addressed by the Board in a Final Decision. The Board never sent a Final Decision. In order to participate in an appeal of the decision, the groups filed their appeal in State Court based on the Order sent out by Powertech.

The two groups raise the contamination of the water and watersheds in their objections, as well as the health risks to all living things.

The permit that is being appealed allows Powertech to drill 155 more exploratory wells at depths of 500-600 feet in the southwestern Black Hills. They already have 4,000 uncapped, and unmarked uranium exploratory wells drilled in the past. The mining company plans on doing In Situ Recovery (ISR) of uranium from the Lakota and Fall River aquifers. In Situ Recovery was formerly known as In Situ Leach mining.

During the ISR process, a solution to dissolve the uranium is poured down the wells and the dissolved uranium brought back up to the surface. The uranium is separated from the rest of the radioactive waste solution. The radioactive waste solution is then put back into the aquifer after being held in waste ponds on the surface. The procedure contaminates aquifers and cannot be controlled underground. In case of sudden rainstorms, the radioactive waste ponds often overflow and contaminate the surface ground and nearby watersheds as well.

According to Powertech's application, each exploratory drill hole "will have a small excavated mud pit that will be approximately 12 feet by 5 feet" and 10 feet deep. Among the concerns of the environmental groups are the possibility of overflow from the mud pits with the sudden rain showers that occur in the Black Hills. One of the aquifers empties directly into the Cheyenne River and is used by many ranchers to water their livestock. Among the deeper aquifers of concern is the Madison which provides water for many western South Dakota communities.

The two groups are considering appealing the request for a stay to the state Supreme Court. They continue to state that Powertech does not have a valid permit to drill until after the appeal of the granting of the permit is finished.

June 27 meeting for community development at Martin

MARTIN - Bring out the paddles - the heart of the community may need a jumpstart. Unfortunately, there seems to be a shortage of people who even care - perhaps if we asked for volunteer pallbearers instead?

It's about community self-improvement, asset building, discovering that everyone has something to contribute - but most of all, it's about you and what you've done and can do to build community spirit and pride. Never done anything to help? Here's your chance to show you can do more than point out problems and wait for someone else to fix them. Already overextended? All that's asked is your support - come to the meeting, see what it's about, and then help convince your less-involved neighbors or family to join. Feel that everything's going down the drain and there's nothing anyone can do about it? We'll be just fine without you, thanks.

Pride Isn't a Free Ride - but it isn't unattainable, either. The Bennett county area has a good start. There are enough positive activities and groups to create an environment of growth and enjoyment. Assets such as the golf course, quality schools, seasonal hunting areas, Lacreek National Wildlife Refuge, Bennett Co. Fair, Rodeo, and Pow Wow, community gym and others contribute greatly to our quality of life. But we could be so much more.

Those willing to help with Community Pride Restoration are invited to join like-minded individuals at a meeting Wednesday, June 27 at 5:30 p.m. in the Martin Grade School Community Room to see where we go from here.

Leadership training at Kyle

KYLE - Community involvement sessions for Medicine Root District will be held Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, June 26, 27 and 28 at the Little Wound Elementary auditorium. The training will start at 10 a.m. until 3 p.m.

The topic of the training is called Leadership Plenty, said Shelly Middletent, one of the organizers. "We would like to recruit 25 committed to the training of three days," she said.

The training is about change within individuals and organizations and within communities.

The focus of the curriculum training will cover nine modules, teach our community and give them tools to designed to equip citizens with skills like effective communication, conflict management and partnership building that they can use to work together as community leaders to reduce poverty. Leadership Plenty is a program developed by PEW Partnership for Civic Change and offered through the Horizons Program of the Northwest Area Foundation.

The program is established for community leaders to work together for common purposes and to recruit people and encourage newcomers.

Young people are encouraged to participate and the training is available to every person in the our community, she said.

We want to collaborate with organizations within Medicine Root District because we want our community to thrive and all work together for a common purpose in reducing poverty, she said.

For more information call Shelly Middletent at 454-2363 or Daphne Richards-Cook at 718-7802.

Community Peacemaking Training June 26

ROSEBUD - SGU Reclaiming Futures Project will be sponsoring Community Peacemaking Training for adults and their high school students in four communities the last week of June at the following time/locations:

Tuesday, June 26 at Horse Creek Community Building from 2-6 p.m.

Wednesday, June 27 at Antelope Community Building from 2-6 p.m.

Thursday, June 28 at the Parmelee Community Building from 2-6 p.m.

Friday, June 29 at the former RES Building from 1-6 p.m.

The purpose of the peacemaking training is to offer parents, grandparents and other adults with a wide variety of tools they can use to enhance their relationship with their teen-age children and other adults.

People will learn how to understand the nature of conflict; learn about addressing communication challenges and how to utilize Lakota cultural values that promote healthier relationships.

Supper will be served and a small honorarium will be provided for up to 25 participants who complete the training at each site.

For more information, please call Marlies White Hat at SGU Reclaiming Futures at 856-8203 or 828-0396.

Boys and Girls Clubs of Rosebud receives $10,000 from California tribe

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

MISSION - On June 4 Jacinda Begay, Chief Professional Officer of the Boys and Girls Clubs of Rosebud made a trip to Ontario, CA to make a presentation to the Tribal Alliance of Sovereign Indian Nations comprised of 14 California tribes. The proposal request for $243,000 included a wide variety of components that would be completed if the funds were awarded to the Boys and Girls Clubs of Rosebud. The areas that require completion include a teen center, computer lab, library, kitchen, outdoor commons and completion of the bowling lanes.

As a result of her presentation Begay received a $10,000 check recently and it came as a complete surprise. The check was donated by the Soboba Band of Luiseno Indians, one of the 14 tribes in the Tribal Alliance of Sovereign Indian Nations. The proposal which she presented earlier is being considered for full funding.

RST Antelope council representative, Cyril "Whitey" Scott made the initial contact with Lynn Valbueno of the San Manuel Band of Mission Indians who is the secretary of the National Indian Gaming Association while on a recent trip to the NIGA conference in Phoenix, AZ.

Scott was scheduled to depart for California, but had to cancel his trip due to a family emergency.

The other areas that are being targeted for completion if the proposal is funded include the office, library, fire place, fire alarm system, ceiling tile, signs and a chain link fence.

Begay reports that all of the vacancies that previously existed at the Boys and Girls Clubs of Rosebud have been filled and that on the average they are serving approximately 200 children a week. All employees are considered RST employees.

Jim Morrison, Facilities Manager, Boys and Girls Clubs of Rosebud Executive Director, Jacinda Begay and RST council representative Cyril "Whitey" Scott of Antelope community were excited at receiving a check to be used to complete construction activities at the club.

Man charged with fatally stabbing boy

RAPID CITY (AP) - A 38-year-old man has been indicted for the stabbing death of a teenage boy Sunday on the Rosebud Indian Reservation.

Bryan Clairmont's girlfriend told the FBI that a man later identified as Melvin Smashed Ice stabbed Clairmont with a pocket knife.

An autopsy found that Clairmont was stabbed in the neck and heart.

According to the criminal complaint, Smashed Ice admitted that after an altercation, he chased Clairmont, kicked his legs out from under him and stabbed him three or four times, saying, ``Don't mess with me, you little gangster.''

Kyle woman pleads guilty to bootlegging

RAPID CITY -Judy Lays Hard recently pled guilty in federal court to dispensing intoxicants in Indian country. Lays Hard, of Kyle, appeared before U.S. District Judge Richard H. Battey and pled guilty to two counts: one misdemeanor and one felony contained in two indictments that were returned following an investigation conducted by the Bureau of Indian Affairs. The maximum penalty upon conviction is five years imprisonment and/or a $250,000 fine. The charges relate to the illegal sale of liquor on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation on December 22, 2005, and December 31, 2005. The case was prosecuted by Assistant United States Attorney Gregg S. Peterman. A presentence investigation was ordered and a sentencing date has been set for Aug. 21.

Sturgis city council renews liquor license for Broken Spoke Saloon

STURGIS - The bills that Jay Allen had left unpaid for several contractors who worked on his Sturgis County Line biker bar had little impact on the Sturgis City Council.

The city council approved Allen's malt liquor license at the Broken Spoke saloon on Monday after his attorney testified that he is working to pay his unpaid contractor bills.

Several people also testified that they did not want Allen to lose his license at the Broken Spoke saloon as he has been an asset to the downtown Sturgis area with his motorcycle collection.

One friend said that she did not think the city should be acting as a collection agent for a project unrelated to the downtown business. Allen owns the Broken Spoke saloon and the Sturgis County Line biker bar.

Allen has been the center of controversy as a number of American Indian groups and ranchers have been adamantly opposed to any biker bar construction anywhere near the sacred Bear Butte.

His 600 acres of land north of Bear Butte and subsequent construction of the Sturgis County Line will bring thousands of bikers, loud music and untold strain on the environment, including local bird and animal habitats.

Bear Butte and the surrounding area is administered by the state as a state park and has been designated as a sacred use area for the Lakota, Northern Cheyenne and Arapaho tribes for prayer and appropriate ceremonies.

Rabbit pled guilty to theft from Indian tribal organization

RAPID CITY - On June 15, David Rabbit, Sr., pled guilty in federal court to theft from Indian tribal organization. Rabbit, of Allen, appeared before U.S. District Judge Karen E. Schreier and pled guilty to the original indictment which was returned following an investigation conducted by U.S. Department of the Interior, Office of Inspector General.

The maximum penalty upon conviction is five years imprisonment and/or a $250,000 fine. The charges relate to incidents wherein Rabbit and two other individuals misapplied and converted monies and assets in excess of $1,000 of the Oglala Sioux Tribe for personal use. A sentencing date has been set for Aug. 27.

The tribe also has charged 41-year-old Rabbit with wrongdoing. He was recently arrested for spousal abuse, assault, eluding police and other tribal charges.

Those incidents allegedly took place while Rabbit was free on bond after being arrested earlier on the federal theft charges.

Memorial services with a meal will be from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. on Monday, June 25, at Prairie Edge Trading Co. & Galleries at Sixth and Main streets in Rapid City. Laura Gordon and Dan Tribby at 342-3086 are in charge of the services.

Shortey was born and raised in Arizona and is a member of the Navajo Nation. Frank lost his parents at a very early age and finished his schooling by selling his paintings in order to survive.

His grandparents became a contributing factor in his life and though he had no formal training in the arts, he drew on his natural talent. By the time Frank graduated, he had won a scholarship in the arts, however, after then losing both Grandparents Frank began to search for his "Traditional Spirituality", that he knew would get him through hardships and fill a void in his life.

As a part of this search, Frank ended up in the Black Hills of South Dakota in 1984, and it was here that he discovered his true spirit and identity. He found himself in a new life, and a way of preserving an "old life" through his art forms.

Leaving behind the Southwest style, Frank began recording history through traditional means such as hide painting.

Frank was adopted into the family and Clan of Redhail, (Wasu' Lu'Da') a Lakota Elder of the Crow Creek Nation.

Participating in the Ceremonies of his newly found people, he began to record that history on the hide paintings and winter count robes.

Today Frank's old style hide painting, ledger art, shields and drum painting are recognized throughout the world.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I hope this letter finds you well. I have a few questions for you. First of all, I read this horoscope reading that stated that in order for me to reach my full potential, I will have to be single.

I am beginning to believe this, because I have been unable to enter into a healthy, lasting relationship. Is this really so? And if not, will I eventually meet a man who will have a healthy, lasting, committed relationship with me?

Secondly, I am curious if I will find housing soon for my daughter and I. A home of our own is something that I greatly desire, mainly to provide a stable and healthy environment for my daughter, because I am the only parent she has. Do you see this as a reality for us soon?

And finally, I am wondering if I will ever be able to have another child. I greatly desire a son, and would like to have one in the future. However, I know that physical problems with my last pregnancy may prevent this.

Also, if I do decide to have another child, I wish to do so alone, because I have a feeling that I will not meet a man who is responsible and "adult" enough to handle a child. Will this cause problems for myself?

Thank you Anna, I hope I did not overwhelm you with all of my questions. Take care and I wish the best for you and yours.

Hopeful

Dear Hopeful:

You have made a decision that you will be single for awhile. There is nothing the matter with that decision; and it is very smart and emotionally strong to wait until you find a man that is really the man you desire to have in your life. I don't necessarily agree that it is in the stars that you will live that way. There are many methodologies of astrology - and some are so amazingly correct that it is far beyond the odds of coincidence. However, since there are many people that are your sign, and certainly not all of them will remain single, I feel that this astrological forecast made for the general public and not specifically designed for your birth date and birth place is not a forecast that you can thoroughly trust.

There is a home for you and your daughter. You will find out more about that this fall.

I do see you with a mate; but feel that it may be as long as five years from now.

He is a well-educated gentle man, well traveled and will have the desire to settle down in South Dakota and work with helping people create a better chance of career success. He is not tall, has dark hair and a small scar on his lip.

You are able to become pregnant. Before you do this please know that there are risks. These risks can be minimized with good medical attention, personal attention to self, and with the help of an interpreter man.

That is the route that I would recommend to insure a healthy pregnancy and birth.

You have formatted your own future to include a pregnancy outside of a relationship. That is pretty much the way I see it too. I do see another pregnancy for you; but I am not so sure it will be a boy.

Good luck and thank you for the kind good wishes.

Dear Anna,

This is the first time I am writing to you. I have a lot of questions on my mind.

The problem is that I don't know how to ask them, I am a really shy person and I am afraid that people will know who I am and they might try to get in to my business but anyways I'll just ask you the questions.

Well this year I landed on the wrong hand, and I just wish that I could turn it back and start over, but I can't.

I want to know if my boyfriend is lying to me about this incident that happened a couple of months ago.

You see he told me a story about this girl liking him and such, and last night I was talking to that girl that apparently she had a crush on him and wanted to hook up with him. She told me the same story but it was the other way around. Apparently he liked her and wanted to hook up with her and then I was talking to one of my friends and he said that my boyfriend went up to him and asked him for advice to break up with a girl (me and my boyfriend have a very complicated relationship).

Did he break up with me because he wanted to go out with her, or was it because of what he really told me - and that was basketball? Who should I believe, because me and him are back together now for at least three months, and this happened in November.

Does he really love me?

Do I really love him?

Is he going to hurt me again?

Is my letter confusing?

All I want to know is, Did I make the right decision on getting back with him? Is he the only one I'm ever going to be with? How long am I going to be with him?

I just need real answers, So can you help me figure out the real answers?

Need Real Answers

Dear Need Real Answers:

He is not the last man (boy) in your life. You are far too young to plan forever with the first strong infatuation being your only experience.

He did and didn't lie to you.

The bright side is that he did break up with you instead of being unfaithful. He is too young to dedicate the rest of his life to you and you alone. He did want to break up because of basketball and he did want to break up because he wanted to be single.

Single means that he wouldn't have to respond to you about anything he wanted to do or anyplace he wanted to go, or anyone that he wanted to hang out with.

The past does not matter. You were broken up. That is history and has no bearing on today. Let go of it.

Who cares?

What difference will it make or does it make?

It is just an excuse to be angry, entrusting, and torture him with your insecurity and anger at being dumped in the first place.

Hang in there sweetheart. He is just a boyfriend, and unless you completely lose your mind and try to marry him, someday he will be an ex boyfriend: An experience of your youth and just a memory.

Now, I have a question for the high school and junior high students? Why are you all so very desperate to "hook up?" What happened to just enjoying your friends company and your friends? Why does dating mean ownership? Why are you trying to imitate marriage and ownership of each other at such a young age? What is going on with you? Please don't blame your parents. You are responsible for you.

Dear Anna,

I have met an African American man who is younger than me and he wants to spend the rest of our lives together.

He wants to move to New Jersey where gays are accepted. I still have feelings for another man who is about my age but he is in prison. What do you see happening?

No Name

Dear No Name:

My advice, especially (no offense intended) is he is Nigerian so be careful. Please don't leave this country to be with a man in Africa unless you have spent a very long time with him here.

That doesn't mean that you cannot visit him if he has to go back - but it is only wise not to take off to Africa right now. It is pushing my alarm buttons.

Guys in prison are guys in prison. They are all in love.

They have a lot of "time on their hands" and write the most loving long letters. Wait until he is released and returned to a real life and see how he chooses to live. Then you can make a better more real decision.

I see a young man that is in college. He is blondish with greenish eyes. Perhaps he lives in Spearfish.

I wouldn't be gay on the rez for a zillion dollars.

Although winkte men used to be considered sacred, because they embodied the strength of a man with feminine characteristics of a woman.

That attitude has long ago perished and been replaced with a much crueler one. For a healthier and happier life where acceptance is everyday in every way, consider a larger city for a better choice of relationship prospects.

I see the west coast for you. Possibly Seattle or Portland? Good Luck and my thoughts and prayers are with you.

Veteran's wall of tribute will stand through time

KYLE - On Saturday, a tribute was given to Oglala Lakota veterans that will stand through time and for many generations to come.

A substantial crowd of veterans, visitors, Oglala Lakota staff and Oglala Lakota tribal officials gathered at Piya Wiconi, the administrative headquarters of Oglala Lakota College on Saturday morning to dedicate a permanent memorial to Oglala veterans of several wars.

Thomas Shortbull, Oglala Lakota president, hosted the event and Wilmer Mesteth who said prayers and purified the monument. The bronze plates with names of the veterans and two bronze statues, representing the Lakota male and female veterans were all wrapped in star quilts until the unveiling was done by veterans. The statues were sculpted by Randall Blaze.

The monument is really about the several bronze panels that have the names of Oglala Sioux veterans from World War I, World War II, Korean War, Vietnam in-country and from the Vietnam era in raised letters. Room was left on the concrete wall for further additions.

John Steele, president of Oglala Sioux Tribe and a Vietnam veteran, gave an introductory speech for the event recalling the war. He spoke

Senators vow to curb violence in Indian country

By Jennifer Talhelm
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Senators, shocked by stories of skyrocketing violent crime on American Indian reservations, are looking into forming a congressional commission to seek a solution.

Senate Indian Affairs Committee Chairman Byron Dorgan, D-N.D., called the increase in rapes, murders, gang shootings and brazen crimes on reservations in recent years ``unbelievable'' and said it is Congress' responsibility to fix it.

``We must find a way. This must stop,'' Dorgan said, as tribal leaders testified to the committee about their frustrations with the Bureau of Indian Affairs police and the Justice Department, which is responsible for major crimes on reservations.

The commission was the suggestion of former Minnesota U.S. Attorney Thomas Heffelfinger, who also testified. The Justice Department alone does not

RST council moves to remove Father Hatcher, rescinds motion

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett
Times Editor

ROSEBUD - The Rosebud Sioux tribal council passed resolution number 2007-147 on Wednesday, June 20 which requests that Bishop Cupich of Rapid City remove Father John Hatcher from St. Francis Mission and the Rosebud reservation.

The resolution was amended by a quorum of the RST council while in session and a roll call vote showed there were 6 voting 'for' in the positive and '4' in the negative. There were 3 'abstentions' and 7 council representatives were absent.

The text of the resolution reads, in part, "Whereas, Father John Hatcher is and (1) promotes elitism amongst tribal members by allowing only a certain few jobs and selective membership for church activities, (2) passes judgments on tribal members by telling them that they will only receive church services if they are an upstanding church attending person, (3) fundraises by using Lakota people/children; the funds received do not benefit the tribal membership, (4) continuously tries to erode sovereign immunity for jobs and use of mission buildings after loss of a million dollars in the R.S.T. Tribal Court."

The next whereas reads, "Father John Hatcher is (5) integrating Lakota Wicoun (the Lakota way of Life) and Lakota designs (sacred symbols-four colors) with the catholic religion offending the feelings of traditional Lakota medicine men and traditional tribal members, as well as (6) creating opulence in the midst of extreme poverty by renovating buildings into dollar settings and plush offices for himself where most tribal being held the day of the dedication at Wounded Knee and of Frank Jealous of Him, Clayton's son, who died in Vietnam. Steele was adopted by Clayton's family.

Several American Legion posts from across the Pine Ridge reservation were in evidence with their respective legion flags, including one tribal member who held up a Vietnam Veteran's flag the entire time.

Ola Millie Rexroat, Oglala Lakota, World War II pilot, was one of the guest speakers and she was honored for her distinguished service and for being one of the few female pilots in the war. She served in the WASP and after that tenure, she went to work as an air traffic controller for the civil aeronautics administration. In addition to a beautiful satin star quilt, the college awarded her a honorary master's degree in Lakota leadership from Oglala Lakota College.

Ola's experiences in World War II included flying the T6 single plane with a large target being towed at 150 miles per hour with a 70 foot cable with other planes flying close enough to her plane to shoot at the target. There were incidents in which the TS single planes were shot down during the target shooting exercises.

Emma "Pinky" Plume spoke of Ola's experiences, of the 25,000 who applied to be pilots, 1,700 were chosen and of those, less than 400 are still here today.

Captain Tasha Standing Soldier of the U. S. Air Force who earned doctoral level credentials in pharmacy from South Dakota State University spoke of the price of freedom and such things as sacrifice, honor and duty while reading from a prepared script. Shortbull pointed out that she was likely the highest ranking officer that the Oglala Sioux have in military service.

The college's carpentry and construction instructors and students were recognized for their work in constructing the sidewalk, the cement walls and the landscaping of the monument.

As the ceremony wound down, all veterans present stood in single file along the sidewalk which extended up a small hill toward the powwow arena. The people then lined up and shook hands with each veteran beginning from the north side. Many veterans turned out for the event, in spite of the extreme heat. A meal was prepared by the college which included chicken, roast beef, mashed potatoes and gravy.

The veteran's memorial is located behind Piya Wiconi, Oglala Lakota College's administrative building, west of Kyle..

have the clout or the interest in fixing the problems, he said.

Heffelfinger had been on a list of prosecutors considered for termination until he resigned last year. Officials in the department had criticized him for spending too much time on Indian issues.

On Thursday, Heffelfinger said if that is the reason he was targeted to be fired, ``It's shameful and embarrassing for the Department of Justice."

He agreed with senators questioning him that ``it's not a coincidence'' that most of the prosecutors targeted had been active on the same Indian subcommittee.

Heffelfinger, who has since joined a private firm, said clashes between the U.S. attorneys and the department are common on Indian issues because the Justice Department views them as ``local'' and less important than national initiatives.

The agency's lack of interest means that ``only a congressionally supervised and monitored group of experts and interested individuals can realistically meet this challenge," Heffelfinger said.

A Justice Department spokesman did not immediately respond.

Tribal leaders said the problems with violent crime have grown worse with the rise of methamphetamine use, and is exacerbated by the lack of police and confusing law enforcement jurisdictions that remain from a century of patchwork legislative action by Congress.

This spring, Amnesty International reported that Indian women are more than twice as likely to be raped as other U.S. women. Suspects often go free because of confusing police jurisdictions and lack of adequate forensic capabilities on reservations, the report found.

Criminal jurisdiction is shared by federal, state and tribal authorities. Which agency responds depends on where the crime occurs and whether the person involved is a tribal member.

Once law enforcement agencies sort out jurisdiction, it might take more than an hour to get to the far corners of a rural reservation. Even then, they often don't follow through.

In one case highlighted by Marcus Wells, chairman of the Three Affiliated Tribes of the Fort Berthold Reservation in New Town, N.D., six guns and body armor were stolen from the home of one of the tribe's own police officers. While BIA took interviews, it took no more action, he said.

Wells and others say the solution is to allow tribes the ability to police all crimes on their land.

members are unwelcome, (7) refusing to attend burials and funerals unless invited."

After the council action was completed by RST, the St. Francis Mission issued a statement originating from its KINI FM studios. The RST resolution was read in its entirety, followed by a postscript that noted that neither the church nor Father Hatcher were invited to the unprecedented council meeting in which a couple of community members brought the resolution to council and a council representative presented it on the council floor.

SFM's announcement, which ran all weekend, also noted that an emergency parish council meeting had been called at St. Charles parish in St. Francis on June 21 where members of the parish council signed a binding resolution in support of Father Hatcher.

The resolution read, in part, "Whereas, some of those present at the tribal council meeting on June 20, 2007 lied and misrepresented the will and desire of the people of the Parish of St. Charles by saying that the Parish Council supported the removal of Fr. John Hatcher, SJ."

It continued, "Therefore, let it be resolved that (1) St. Charles parish council supports Fr. John Hatcher and St. Francis Mission in their many new works. (2) That St. Charles Parish asks the Tribal Council to rescind their resolution regarding Fr. Hatcher that was passed on June 20. (3) That Bishop Cupich of the Diocese of Rapid City and the Superior of the Wisconsin Province of the Society of Jesus be notified of the support of St. Charles Parish for the ministry of Fr. Hatcher, SJ and and that the parish council ask that Fr. Hatcher not be removed. (4) That St. Charles Parish asks other Parishes which Fr. Hatcher and St. Francis Mission minister at to make similar resolutions of support."

Father Hatcher

On Wednesday, June 27, the Rosebud Sioux tribal council entertained a motion to re-consider the motion to remove Fr. Hatcher and tabled it until July. The resolution is no longer in effect. SFM apparently asked to be present at that meeting. RST President Rodney M. Bordeaux said that he was aware of two tribal members who wanted to be heard on the issue. It was noted that both sides of the issue wished to also be heard.

Bonnie Hairy Shirt, one of the sponsors of the resolution and of St. Francis Indian School, said since St. Francis Mission lost their case in tribal court with the school regarding $1 million from a foundation trust, Father Hatcher has required the school to sign a waiver of immunity that waives any and all sovereign immunity which they might have under any charter for usage of Digmann Hall. She said employees of the Mission have been required to sign a choice of law and forum clause which states any disputes of the employee contract will be heard in state court.

Hairy Shirt said documents were forwarded to Rev. Cupich and Father Kretek, bishop of Rapid City explaining reasons of the resolution to the tribe.

"Please keep in mind we are in no way attacking the church, the parish or the parishners, only the insensitivity of Father Hatcher," she stated in a letter to Kretek.

By these documents we are praying you will remove Father Hatcher and replace him with a priest that is compatible to the Lakota people in general. I must admit we are spoiled by the caliber of priests like Father Jones, Father Gill and Father Fagen and others who were like surrogate fathers to our people and probably can never be replaced," she said.

Meth tool kit available to tribes

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) - The use of highly addictive methamphetamine is endangering tribal cultures across the nation, leaders with the National Congress of American Indians said June 11, unveiling a new "meth toolkit" to help communities battle what they called a looming crisis.

"Meth is a lot different than marijuana and alcoholism, which is more long term," NCAI President Joe Garcia said during a news conference in Anchorage. "With meth, the effects are almost immediate."

American Indians have been especially wracked by the drug, with an abuse rate of 1.7 percent, almost three times the rate for whites, according to NCAI statistics. On some reservations, addiction rates are closer to 30 percent.

"Meth threatens to eradicate an entire generation," said Carl Artman, assistant secretary of the BIA. "This is something we cannot waste a lot of time on."

The multimedia toolkit - packaged in a large colorful box - is the product of a joint effort between tribal leaders, BIA and NCAI, one of the nation's oldest organizations serving indigenous groups, including Alaska Natives.

Inside the box are information sheets and CDs detailing the devastating effects of meth on health and families, and the damage to the environment from dumping toxic chemicals used to make the drug. There are stickers for children and a poster showing photos of a female addict's deteriorating face over a 10-year span.

The kit, developed in consultation with Montana State University, contains a wealth of information invaluable to schools, courts, law enforcement and health communities, officials said. The CDs can be edited to customize to a community's needs, said Heather Dawn Thompson, NCAI's director of governmental affairs.

The kits will cost about $130 to cover the cost of production and can be purchased through the NCAI. Officials said they hope states will step in with funding.

Man admits causing accident that killed Denoyer

PIERRE, S.D. (AP) _ A Sioux Falls man acknowledges that he caused an accident that killed a Rosebud man.

Ivan Watts, 31, was accused of driving negligently Jan. 31 in Todd County on the Rosebud Indian Reservation and killing Pete Denoyer.

Watts has pleaded guilty in U.S. District Court in Pierre to involuntary manslaughter and faces a maximum punishment of six years in prison when he's sentenced Aug. 30.

Exposures photography program returns

KYLE - The Exposures Cross Cultural Youth Photography Program will be working with youth from Pine Ridge and other parts of the country at Little Wound School from July 2 through 13. the group worked out of Pine Ridge and Red Cloud the last two years.

Exposures is inviting community members interested in making photographic quilts from images the youth program creates. Experienced quilters wanting to learn how to print photographs on cloth or others just wanting to help are invited to participate.

The program also wants to collaborate with individuals, families or organizations in and around Kyle in making photographs and stories. If you know of anyone or any organizations who might like to have photographs made, call them.

On Friday evening, July 13, there will be a one night exhibit of the artwork created and there will be a free meal at 6 p.m.

Everyone is welcome to come an see the artwork and share food with the art students," said John Willis, program coordinator, who has been coming to Pine ridge for the last several years.

For additional information call John at 454-8127 or Erin Barnard at 454-8039.

tuality."

During their 34th graduation ceremonies, Oglala Lakota College awarded 168 degrees, eight masters and 43 bachelors.

On Thursday, June 21, 33 students received their GED certificates and on Saturday, OLC honored over 1,800 men and women who participated in the U.S. military in World War I, World War II, Korea and Vietnam.

"The U.S. government, schools and churches worked hard to assimilate Lakota people as soon as possible, there was Carlisle Indian School and many others like it that took Lakota children as hostages trying to assimilate the children," said Adelstein, "we need to be integrated into the ways of the worlds, not assimilated and education is the way to go but stay who you are. Art LaCroix was the first Lakota to become mayor of Rapid City and he built a fine administration, he brought Lakota values with him, he was integrated not assimilated."

Following the presentation of diplomas, students receiving special awards included: Lynette Cuny/Lloyd Eagle Bull for highest GPA with a masters degree, Raulin Martin/Black Elk award for highest GPA getting a bachelors, Cory Yellow Boy and Francine Parmenter/Reyer Award, Elisha Ann Risse/Hattie Twiss Award, Steve Yellow Hawk/Patrick Hays Award, Iva Good Voice Flute/Spirit of Jeanne Smith, Doug Patton/Robert Gay Memorial, Phinette Little White Man/Lakota Studies, Marshall and Janice Burnette/Lakota Studies, Norma Tibbitts/Nursing, Susan Geleiga and Steve Yellow Hawk.

"As you leave here today, look at the horizon, it I different than when you started towards your degree," said Adelstein, "you have been integrated into society but as I did, I was a soldier and an American and I always wore the Star of David, think about who you are and as you go down that road how will you honor your Lakota values and history."

The college sponsored the annual graduation wacipi and dance contest to honor all of the graduates; Sunday there were 110 dancers participating in the grand entry as 13 drum groups gathered to provide the music.

When the dust settled Sunday night, the dance contest winners included:

Remembering Sunshine, murdered Lakota woman special spirit

By Brenda Norrell
Special to the Times

Lillian "Sunshine" Wright

TUCSON - At the end of a scorching day, with a gentle breeze at sunset, the people of Tucson came from every walk of life to a downtown park to honor a special soul that touched the lives of so many in her life and death.

Lillian Ruth Wright, known as Sunshine, was Lakota Sioux from Rosebud, South Dakota. Wright was found on the morning of June 12, laying in a pool of blood beneath the stars where she chose to sleep in downtown Tucson.

Rosebud Sioux tribal member Connie Laven and Sunshine's sister Sylvia Konop remembered Sunshine and thanked those who came to Presidio Park to honor her.

Laven asked the crowd to imagine an Indian boarding school, with people carrying wajapi and fry bread, with beautiful star quilts and speaking words of respect. She asked those gathered to imagine Sunshine's friends shaking hands with the family and crying as they vowed never to forget her.

"We bury our dead very well," Laven said.

Attorney Robert Lundquist, who allowed Sunshine to sleep outside his law office and housesit at his home during summers, tearfully remembered this Lakota soul who gave him so much.

Bearing a basket of organic vegetables from his garden as an offering for those who came and were in need of food, Lundquist spoke of the gifts that Sunshine gave him.

"She was a gift to humanity, as we all can be," Lundquist told the crowd of several hundred friends, attorneys, community members and people who make their homes on the streets of Tucson.

Lundquist said his journey to meet Sunshine began in college. After he read, "Bury My Heart at Wounded Knee," he said he no longer thought like a white man. Then, he read, "Black Elk Speaks."

Lundquist said all Native American people call themselves "human beings," in their own languages, because that is what people truly are. "I was destined to meet Sunshine because I finally saw that."

"When Sunshine came to our house, she blessed us with her spirit." With Sunshine, the family watched "Dances with Wolves." She pointed out her Lakota relatives and the parts of the film that were right and those that were "baloney."

Lundquist said for Native Americans, there is no word for religion, because their lives are their religions. "Sunshine taught that to all of us." She was kind, witty and intelligent.

Sunshine taught Lundquist to speak Lakota words; he called out those words in her honor. She gave him a new name, "Warrior."

"By God, I'm going to live up to it."

As the wind grew stronger and stirred the drums and feathers at the memorial, Lundquist said, "We can't see you, but we can feel you.

"Her spirit is here."

In his hand, Lundquist held sweetgrass, a gift she always gave him. He remembered how she would housesit for the family in summers, loving the animals and tending the garden. She would stay on for a couple of weeks when they returned. But ultimately, she missed sleeping beneath the stars. She missed her friends, and always offered cash or an extra sleeping bag to those in need on the streets.

Sister Rebecca Theresa said Sunshine had dreams like everyone else, but life had come along and interrupted those. Sunshine had been a nurse in Vietnam.

"Nobody went through Nam and came out the same.

"She had to live with it."

Theresa memorialized Sunshine with the lyrics, "Look what they've done to my song, ma."

Laura Ward, a city of Tucson employee befriended her, here in Presidio Park where Sunshine spent her days. Ward bought Sunshine a CD of warrior drum songs, because those were Sunshine's favorites. When she realized Sunshine had no way to listen to them, she bought a little stereo for her. Ward temporarily delayed giving it to her, for fear that owning it would make her a target.

"She never got to hear this song, but maybe she can hear it now," Ward said with tears, as the Grandmother's Prayer sounded out and floated from the park.

Ward said stories of Sunshine will be collected and placed in a book, a collection of handwritten stories, to be shared here, in Presidio Park, during Friday markets.

At the memorial, Preyin' Eagle, Native American drummers from Phoenix, joined Elliott Gover & Sons, Pumpkin Vine of the Pawnee Tribe and Tony Redhouse to offer drum, flute and musical tributes to Sunshine.

Tucson police have not released the details of her murder or the names of any suspects. Sunshine's Chihuahua, Wichica (Little Girl), was put up for adoption by the Pima Animal Care Center and more than 50 people volunteered to adopt the dog.

Most of those attending the memorial were surprised by the large crowd. Still, they were happy to live in a community where people take time to care.

Others paused and wondered how many times they had passed Sunshine on the street and failed to say hello, or to even see her.

During the memorial, Pastor Rolly Loomis of the United Methodist Church, spoke of her humor and how she loved and cared for everyone.

"She would often give money to those in need."

Loomis said the things that matter to most of us, the material things, didn't matter to her. "She lived it for us."

Sunshine's friends said she could see inside one's soul.

Loomis said Sunshine saw the authentic self within each person. Although she stayed at times inside, she always returned outdoors.

"She always returned to her home under the stars," Loomis said.

"Sunshine died on holy ground."

Thoughts that come from the heart

Education will always be the answer

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett
EDITOR AND PUBLISHER
LAKOTA COUNTRY TIMES

My sister Devonna Bush graduated this past week with her masters degree in Lakota leadership management with an emphasis in educational administration from Oglala Lakota College and another sister finally got her GED so she can take college classes.

We came from a family of 12, Devonna is sixth from the oldest and I am third from the youngest. Our tiwahe is huge, out of the 12 siblings, we have more than a 100 grand children together, I gave up counting when it reached 110. In the Lakota way, that means we are grandma to those 100 and some grandchildren and great unci to the 20 some children from them.

My mom was a great archivist, she kept track of the names and the birthdays, and we still try to do it in bits and pieces. It's important to keep family history rolling to the next generation, it helps our youth to know who they are.

She has been a teacher for many years, she taught at Standing Rock High School for a short while, then at American Horse School as a gifted and talented teacher for 14 years and now she will job hunting for something that will fit her criteria.

She has touched the lives of many, many children through those years, just as she has touched my life.

I always saw her as a good teacher, she is dedicated to educating children and she is good at what my mom used to say, owigni or inigni, which meant being resourceful.

My mom would say if you have a lot of kids, that it was a skill you needed to learn in order for the survival of your children. Devonna is that way, not only with her own children but with her students. She is creative in that way, by looking for the coolest things to do so her students will have fun learning and brainstorming how to solve problems.

She and her husband John Bush have been married for 40 years and raised three boys and three girls and looked after many other children, including me. I learned a lot from her in my life, mostly about respecting myself in a sense to care for myself. They are generous people, especially when it comes to hospitality, there was always something to eat their home.

In all, my sister is a great teacher. I could write a book from the stories she tells of classroom experiences. I have the utmost respect for her and what she has done with her life but most of all, she has been a great teacher of the meaning of wowaunsila.

On Sunday, there were eight people who received their masters in the education field, along with the others who received bachelors, associates and certificates. Devonna, Colleen Bettelyoun, Chris Bordeaux, Lynette Cuny, Lyle Iron Horn, Burt Medicine Bull, Aspen Rendon, Robert Taken Alive and Charlie White Buffalo acquired masters degrees that day and each of them have already made an impact on someone's life with their teaching and now they have a tool to empower them to move on to make even greater impacts.

That goes for all of the graduates. Those that received bachelors, associate of arts, and certificates, it was hard work to get that far and each of them has someone backing them.

Sunday was a day of celebration and accomplishment, not only for the graduates and families but for the college's vision.

Every year, there is always so much pride and accomplishment during graduation days for Oglala Lakota College and Sinte Gleska University and other institutions.

On those days, I think of Sitting Bull, Crazy Horse, Red Cloud, Spotted Tail and Little Wound, as they struggled with an answer to the future for their people.

This was the answer.

Finding My Voice

Embracing tiwahe

Dana Badmilk

There are many ceremonies of our Lakota people that are still practiced in this day and age and preserved through the years. There are also many of these ceremonies that are exploited. I guess I am not really here to talk about that this week. I just wanted to make that point, to start with.

Other than ceremonies we have many traditions that we practice and have been throughout the years.

One of these is the memorial dinner which is held one year after a loved one has passed. Sometimes, or most of the times the "Wiping Of The Tears" is performed at this memorial and it is time for the mourning to end.

If anyone reading is not familiar, the Memorial Dinner is a celebration of sorts of that loved one's life. Songs are sung, words are said, a feast follows with a giveaway of many wonderful things, including starquilts and such. Many families save up all year for this one last celebration of that person's life.

Which is really what I want to talk about.

Family.

Tiwahe.

A 6 letter word either way.

And a very strong word.

I often joke that "You choose your friends not your family." Or that my family puts the "dis" in dysfunction, or the "funk" in dysfunction. Or there is an old joke that we are the "Bright Family" when someone does something that is not so bright. It's all good and fun. I like to joke and laugh around, as does my family.

But for real, FAMILY is a very powerful part of our lives. I know many times when I lived off the reservation and I felt something in my life was missing, it was family. Which resulted in monstrous phone bills.

Many times when I felt there was nowhere else to turn, there they were.

Or sometimes when I am home alone and everything is peaceful, someone shows up to visit and eat. It's all good. Tiole is the way to be.

Sometimes when I am sad from watching some dumb, sad chick flick, my family laughs at me and makes me feel dumb for crying to Toy Story, uh I mean, uh...Legends of The Fall.

Sometimes when I....I mean my kids lock my keys in the car, my part of the family that knows how to open car doors without keys, will help me out.

Or sometimes, when I am short on change in the grocery store, someone in my family will put something back from my cart and tell me I really don't need those Swiss Cake Rolls.

Then there's the time when a cat attacked me from a nearby bush and made me scream and run, (last year) who else was there to laugh at me but my family.

Aw...and when I got married, who else but my brothers took a pool on how long it would last. By the way, my brother Steve wanted me to mention that there really isn't a pool, but if there was and anyone was interested, it would be 25 dollars in a money order along with a self addressed stamped envelope. Such jokers, they are!

And my family is so great that if I fall, they race to run over and put their arms widely spread out in front of me and scream "SAFE!" Of course I was safe, I just fell on ice....at night....in the middle of a deep freeze.

OR the time my little sister was so thankful on Earth day when I told her how simple can she be to not know how to plant a baby pine tree that she hit me in the face with it.

Or my other little sister who was so concerned when she painted the wall with toothpaste that she cleaned it up all by herself....with my suede jacket!

The best was when my 4 year old little sister and I was stuck on a bumper boat because I didn't know how to steer it. So my family rallied around us and soaked us until the guy at the park jumped in and rescued us from drowning.

My family is awesome. Our ties bind us. I treasure every minute I get to laugh, cry, hug, be around, and fall down around them.

Treasure every minute you get with your family...so you are not one day sitting at a memorial dinner and regretting the time you didn't spend with them.

Honor your family, even if they put the "funk" in dysfunction.

Love your family because they love you. (That doesn't mean snag your cousin! We are Lakota, not hillbilly! HEEY!)

Embrace your family, because if nobody else is there, they will be.

I didn't choose my family, but I am thankful for all of them.

A mother's worst nightmare

Dear Editor:

My name is Robin Tapio, and today I am writing to anyone out there who will listen. I would especially like people to hear about the corruption that goes on in Pine Ridge and on our reservation. Last week I read an article in the Rapid City Journal which stated a man of Pine Ridge was picked up on a weapon charge, and had a previous drug conviction charge.

Someone from Rapid City blogged in "Public Safety commended."

Well let me tell you this: he is just the tip of the iceberg when it comes to drug dealers in Pine Ridge. They're on every corner and Public Safety chooses to look the other way!

Our cocaine addiction amongst the youth and adults is at an all time high. We have repeatedly heard of drug busts by Public Safety and when it comes time for court all the evidence seems to disappear!

This group who is here to protect and serve are worse than the "Mafia". I believe Public Safety is corrupt and there are a given "few" who are thriving off people's misery. Vergil Pourier, my son who you've read about being in a car accident was a victim of Public Safety's negligence to pick him up.

Vergil had been struggling with a cocaine addiction since he was 13 years old. (I myself am a recovering addict and alcoholic since 2000.)

He's been to Sky Ranch for boys, treatment, and I was about to have him sent away again. He completed treatment on March 8, 2007 at Timberline Treatment Center.

Since April I have been desperately trying to have Public Safety pick him up and hold him in JDC until I could again find placement.

There are countless pick-up orders, JINOC, and warrants to apprehend him yet these officers who see him every night turned a blind eye on him!

I have been told at least five times that he would be picked up. I went to the police station at least 3 or 4 times a week since April. On June 1st at 4:15 pm I ran down to the police station crying and asked the officer to come to my mothers residence about 100 yards away and pick him up; he was high on cocaine and drunk!

He was downstairs in his room at the time we waited and waited no one came! Finally about 6 p.m .he disappeared from the basement.

That was the last time I saw him. On Saturday June 2, 2007 he was in a horrific car accident (in which he was driving) 5 miles north of Pine Ridge. He had a very large amount of cocaine and marijuana in his system at the time.

At Rapid City Regional they informed us he had severe trauma to the brain and he ruptured his aorta.

We were directly life flighted to the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn. My son never once regained consciousness. The Neurosurgeons put a bolt in his head to alleviate swelling and pressure, but it would not help with the brain functions.

The vascular surgeons then repaired his aorta, but he began to swell and his organs began to shut down.

Vergil passed away at 5:45 am on June 6, 2007. A young man with so many hopes and dreams. I plan on forming a coalition of people with complaints about Public Safety, have a peaceful protest; as our congressional delegates to get involved and maybe even contact various organizations, because this corruption and negligence against community members has to stop!

Two other teens have passed on from a Meth overdose and the other one was stabbed.

I never imagined that my son would be the third.

I am a grieving a mother,
Robin Tapio

Northern Perspectives

Protecting our children today

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

Is it just me or do all older parents worry as much as I do about all of the potential illnesses and viruses that represent danger to our children. Maybe generations of parents have always worried about such things. Never mind the usual dangers of drugs and alcohol, there are also the usual illnesses and afflictions that our children normally get vaccinated for.

Things like rubella, mumps, chicken pox, polio and tetanus are just a few of the childhood diseases that our children get vaccinated for, however, there are others which are recommended by pediatricians.

Most are effectively treated by the standard regimen of vaccines, however, there is a booster shot recommended for chicken pox that most people probably are not aware of. Obviously I am not a pediatrician so if you have small children you might want to consult with them on any outstanding shots they may be need.

Most of the schools are very conscientious in specifying the range of vaccinations that children need before attending school, however, as a parent there is one that I need to research to see if the benefit outweighs the risks if my son were to get it.

I am making reference to the meningitis shot and it is something that I have been thinking about a lot in recent weeks. I need to simply do more research on it and then decide it he should have it.

There was a young college student who died recently in the state who had been working with girls scouts and contracted the disease which apparently can kill in a matter of hours.

It sounds like it is a rare disease, but one which can happen when there are a large group of people like college students and others living in close proximity. I hope all parents will consider doing their own research and consulting with their pediatricians or family doctor.

I have not examined my child's shot record carefully, but I am assuming that it is one that is not required.

At least I don't recall seeing it, but will follow up on it. I would imagine there are other recommended vaccinations that people could receive and it would depend on their line of work later in life or their particular social environments.

Anyway, the world really is a scary place to live when you consider all of the environmental factors that could pose a risk to our lives.

Mother Earth for all of her beauty is going to be changing in the next 100 years or so based upon some projections that some scientists have carried out. The world's population base is literally going to increase substantially and put a terrible strain on the world's resources while the polar ice caps will eventually melt and raise the ocean level by three feet or so.

Luckily, most of us are not going to live for a hundred years, but our children will surely see some of the beginning effects of population changes and increasing temperatures. Some day in the future if we do not do something about all of the escaping green house gases higher levels of carbon dioxide will eventually lead to the extinction of many plants and animals.

Fresh water will be scarce as well as the oil which most nations depend on.

Anyway, you can look up the projection for the future of the world and in the meantime, you can also think about our precious children and ensure that they are protected today from the routine diseases and potential health risks which are out there. Prevention is a nice sounding word, but it really is true that using prevention will help to delay or eradicate some of the issues which are facing future generations.

A tribute to Crystal Bad Wound

Dear Editor:

The Foster Grandparent Program would like to pay tribute to Crystal Bad Wound, who was a wonderful volunteer since August 4, 2003, in the Black Hills Foster Grandparent Program.

She volunteered with children at YO in Martin and most recently at the Girls and Boys Club in Martin. Crystal's enthusiasm toward assisting children after school was made evident by her continued participation in the Foster Grandparent Program even while fighting illness. She attended required trainings even when she was too ill to actually be with the children and then, as soon as she was well enough, she was back with the children again in an exemplary fashion.

She volunteered over 3,000 hours which qualified her for a Gold pin last year. Crystal died on June 13, 2007. Staff and fellow Foster Grandparents in the Foster Grandparent Program will miss her immensely and we consider it a great privilege to have known her.

Her legacy will include a true love and caring for children in her community.

A father speaks for his daughter

Dear Editor:

Hello to Lakota Country Times and staff and to all out there reading your great paper of happenings.

My name is Verdell Yellow Horse, father of Jaimie who is unable to answer any on goings with her namesake. I'm writing this to you in concern of her well being.

She was found guilty by the public from day one, broadcasted several times more than any other similar case state-wide.

She was more than willing to plead guilty and take her fate head on, she wasn't allowed to.

Time went on, we waited while she was at her key low point waiting, not knowing what may become of her case. Then she was switched judges. One obstacle after another, but as her father, she deserves a little courtesy and respect.

She accepted her fate, but to get acknowledged with this little word of hate on air on May 23 is totally undeserving.

As her loving father am only backed by family to an extent.

There's more to this but I'll hold off, see how this goes for now.

Notes From Indian Country

Clinton came, saw and moved on

By Tim Giago (Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

President Bill Clinton came to the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota at the tail end of his administration. He witnessed the extreme poverty and absorbed the feelings of hopelessness, and then moved on.

Nothing changed.

Clinton's emissary from the Housing and Urban Development (HUD), Andrew Cuomo, now Attorney General of New York State, followed Clinton to Pine Ridge, had his photographer take pictures of the Third World conditions in housing, had the pictures blown up, framed them, hung them on his office walls, and then moved on.

Nothing changed.

Shannon County, the heart of the Pine Ridge Reservation, is still among the top ten poorest counties in America. Since it was proclaimed as the poorest county in America in the U. S. Census of 1980, 27 years ago, nothing has changed.

I now believe that by behaving as victims of poverty, the Lakota people are shortchanging themselves. We must rid ourselves of this "victim mentality" and enter a new paradigm of "prospective prosperity."

As victims of poverty the Lakota people have become the beneficiaries of handouts. This benevolence includes used clothing, used furniture and a whole lot of religious enthusiasm offered by those who believe that our road to prosperity must pass beneath the arch of a church. Plenty Indians have become infected by "that old time religion" but it hasn't done much to feed or house them. Nor has it done much to bring jobs and prosperity.

I emailed www.hillaryclinton.com and asked her to follow her husband's trail to Pine Ridge, but to come here with thoughts of economic development leading to prosperity on her mind. We don't need more handouts. We need a hand up. Whether she wins or loses, the problems that exist on this reservation will still be here waiting to be solved.

It seems that the mindset of South Dakota's Congressional delegation keeps us compartmentalized as victims.

While they work for and introduce bills to move the white population of the state towards prosperity, they eke out bills designed to keep the people of the Great Sioux Nation in poverty.

If we had some genuine, forward looking leaders amongst our people, they would also erase this picture of poverty stricken victims and instill in the people a pride that will lead to a goal of prosperity. They can do this by creating a commission to represent all nine tribes of the Sioux Nation and send this delegation to visit every wealthy tribe in America looking for funds and ideas.

They would send this delegation to visit with all of the major corporations in America and make an effort to entice them to construct industry on reservation lands. There are plenty of unemployed skilled and unskilled laborers available and the corporations would also receive countless tax-free benefits. If American jobs are now outsourced to India, why not outsource a few of them to the American Indians?

For those who would do good you can replace the truckloads of used clothing and furniture with truckloads of lumber, plywood, hammers, nails, concrete, trucks, backhoes, Caterpillars, road graders, and other building materials and equipment, so that our carpenters, plumbers and electricians can start to build homes for the thousands of people that are now nearly homeless. By so doing you have just created jobs and a future.

Maybe a wealthy casino tribe can buy busses that can traverse this reservation that is 100 miles long and 50 miles wide so that the people without automobiles can make it to town to buy groceries, visit the hospital or report to their jobs without having to pay a friend or relative an arm and a leg to get them there.

HUD can help move us toward prosperity by demolishing the "cluster houses" it built over the years to save money and begin to build houses on the land the people abandoned in order to move into the cluster communities. The cluster homes contributed to violence, gangs, drugs and crime that did not exist when the people lived in homes on their own allotment lands.

Internally we have a lot of problems to solve, problems of alcoholism, drug abuse and a very high incident of high school dropouts. Contributing to these problems are the lack of jobs, adequate housing, poor healthcare and a mindset that causes us to believe we are victims.

If Congress would allocate the money it spends in one day in Iraq to improve the lives of its own citizens living on the poorest reservations in America, then and only then, can it hold itself up as an example for the rest of the world. There is an old saying that a nation shall be judged on how it treats its indigenous people and to date, America has a failing record.

Bill Clinton came, saw and moved on. Whether the next president is Hillary or whoever, maybe they will come to Pine Ridge, see the problems, solve them, and not move on. Or at least give the people the means to solve the problems themselves.

Advance military cadre visits Rosebud

By Archie B. Beauvais
Special to the Times

ROSEBUD - U. S. Army, Captain Shelley Brooks and U. S. Air Force, Staff Sergeant Sabrina Bullock-Labaran of the Andrews Air Force base in Maryland represented an advance team that met with Dr. Valerie Parker ahead of a larger medical team that will arrive on the Rosebud reservation in August.

Both military personnel had been on the Rosebud three years ago and on this particular visit will be gathering data and other relevant statistics for presentation to the commanding officer. Based on their "After Action Report" which will focus on the particular health needs here, their superior will decide which personnel to send out on what the military describes as a "humanitarian mission" for two weeks.

Those who sign on to the humanitarian mission are given a choice of three places to go for temporary duty; the Rosebud Hospital and the Rosebud reservation is one of those choices.

Brooks made the point that the military health team is accustomed to serving civilian dependents and therefore, coming to the Rosebud to assist in delivering health care where needed is within their scope of activity. She said, "We make sure there are no conflicts. We can come later or earlier. We make sure that all needs are met in terms of logistics, transportation and meals. It is a humbling experience to see how things are done on the reservation."

U.S. Army, Captain Shelley Brooks, and U.S. Air Force, Staff Sergeant, Sabrina Bullock-Labaran were on the Rosebud reservation as an advance team meeting with Rosebud I.H.S. personnel to arrange a larger team of military health professionals who will arrive on the Rosebud in August. The 15 member team from Andrews Air Force in Maryland will work in dentistry, optometry and the emergency room for two weeks.

Brooks, who specializes in infection control, education and training said that the health personnel who will come in August will come from the area of dentistry, optometry, and emergency medicine and may include a couple of physicians.

SSG Bullock-Labaran, 26, has been with the Air Force for six years and specializes in health services management and is qualified to teach CPR. She is close to earning her associate of arts degree and plans on being a midwife or earning a doctor of medicine degree one day. Brooks, a registered nurse holds a Bachelor of Science degree from Hampton University in Virginia.

Both Brooks and Bullock-Labaran are not sure if they will return with the full contingent of 15 military health professionals who arrive in August, but they are hopeful. Bullock-Labaran, as a part of her military basic dress, is allowed to wear the head scarf that is representative of her Muslim faith.

Tribes can now get FEMA homes

WASHINGTON (AP) - Tribes throughout the country will receive 2,000 unused trailers intended for Hurricane Katrina victims after the storm hit two years ago.

Thousands of trailers have been idling in Arkansas and Texas, prompting criticism about government waste. They originally were purchased to house people displaced by the hurricane, but officials with the Federal Emergency Management Agency said regulations against placing the homes in flood plains prevented their use on the Gulf Coast.

Last year, Sen. Tim Johnson, D-S.D., urged the agency to donate the trailers to Indian country, but the agency said federal law dictated the trailers must be used for disaster victims. In September, Johnson pushed through legislation allowing FEMA to sell or donate the trailers.

Nine months later, the trailers will finally be distributed, Johnson said in a statement issued by his office last Friday.

``I saw pictures of tens of thousands of empty mobile homes sitting unused in Hope, Arkansas, while South Dakotas Indian tribes were struggling through a tough winter with inadequate housing,'' Johnson said in the statement. ``There is still much that needs to be done to improve Indian housing, but this is a good step toward addressing this serious problem.''

Indian housing has been a problem for decades. According to a 2003 survey, approximately 90,000 Indian families are homeless or ``under-housed.''

Tribal officials throughout the country will be able to inspect the homes from July 9 to July 20, then they can make requests which will be administered by the Bureau of Indian Affairs. The homes are mostly three bedrooms homes.

Johnson is out of the Senate recovering from a December brain hemorrhage, but has been working from home on the issue, said spokeswoman Julianne Fisher.

LAKOTA LANGUAGE SURVEY RESULTS

Oceti Wakan, a small non-profit, in Calico Community on the Pine Ridge Reservation has been doing a systematic house to house survey in each of the nine Districts on Pine Ridge Reservation to see the health of the Lakota language on our reservation. This has been funded by an ANA (Administration for Native Americans) grant. Last week they reported Medicine Root District and Pass Creek District representing 1,435 tribal members. There have been over 9,000 people who have been surveyed on the Reservation. Oceti Wakan mission is for the preservation of Lakota language and culture. We have developed books and CDs on both.

We would like to share with the community the results for each District with the people. As you will be able to see, we are in serious jeopardy of losing the Lakota language. We hope these results that we will be publishing over the next several weeks will help us break the denial of just how serious this is.

PINE RIDGE DISTRICT – LAKOTA LANGUAGE SURVEY RESULTS
445 households (65 not home) were surveyed representing 1,854 tribal members

Hicks reaches for Eagle Scout honor by cleaning up Inestimable Gift Cemetery

ALLEN - A 17-year-old Spearfish youth says he's confident that he will make Eagle Scout status with the Boy Scouts of America's before his 18th birthday, July 26.

The work is done, said Jared Hicks, 17, Oglala Lakota, son of Harvey and Carol Hicks of Spearfish. Earlier this month the Spearfish High School junior coordinated a group of friends, family members and fellow scouts from the Belle Fourche Troop 252, to help restore the cemetery at Allen.

The graveyard holds a bit of history for Hicks and his family.

"I decided on the Allen cemetery because my great-great-grandfather Amos Ross started the church and cemetery," said Jared, grandson of Marva and Ross Hicks of Martin.

Rev. Ross helped found the Inestimable Gift Church where he served for nearly 40 years before retiring in 1927.

Hicks said he scoped out the acre of ground speckled with tombstones and large grassy area during his initial trip. Then, he organized workers, tools and materials for the graveyard cleanup in early June.

"It was a lot of work," he said. "The hardest part was getting all the supplies for mowing, trimming and fencing down there."

The fencing alone was quite a chore, said Hicks. Crews put up several portions of fence that had fallen down and relocated others. Because no welding had been done on the initial construction of the fence, Hick said they had to use screws and bolts to stabilize the medal panels.

Top: The Inestimable Gift Episcopal (Allen) cemetery, before recent repair, shows how the grounds had aged through years of neglect and weathering. This spring Jared Hicks (above), of Spearfish, selected the historic graveyard as a project for completion of his Eagle Scout award.

Right: Pruning lilac bushes, fellow Boy Scouts from Belle Fourche Troop 252 assist Jared Hicks in his quest to cleanup the Inestimable Gift Episcopal (Allen) Cemetery. Friends and family volunteers helped with landscape maintenance and fence repairs earlier this month. Many of the rod iron panels were repositioned several feet away from the original fence line that surrounds cemetery, established more than 100 years ago by Jared Hicks' great-great-grandfather, Rev. Amos Ross. COURTESY PHOTOS OF KRIS GARLICK-BEATY.

Boy Scout supporters helped mow the grass, trim the trees, shape the lilac bushes and pick up loads of garbage around the sacred grounds.

"It worked out better than I had hoped," said Hicks, who with his brother, Justin, has been a scouting participant since the second grade.

To become an Eagle Scout, the highest rank in BSA, Hicks had to earn a total of 21 badges, with 15 badges falling under required guidelines. In addition, a final project had to be completed for the benefit of a community, local group or organization other than Scouts. The idea had to be approved by the Black Hills Council of the BSA. Hicks will now offer a written synopsis of the project to the council for final approval.

Arthur Rose Eldred was America's first Eagle Scout. Hicks will be the next local Boy Scout to join the ranks of nearly 1.5 million young men to hold the distinction of Eagle Scout since its inception in 1911.

Area educators participate in youth lifeskills curriculumn training

By Archie B. Beauvais
Times Correspondent

MISSION - Kaufmann and Associates of Spoke, Wash. held a three day "American Indian Life Skills Curriculum Training" at the Rosebud Casino from June 18-20. Kaufman and Associates were originally approached by the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration and were asked to sponsor training in response to the recent suicide, violence and bullying in Indian Country.

The training is labeled "Native Aspirations" and relies upon a textbook developed by Teresa LaFramboise of Stanford University. The text is entitled "American Indian Life Skills Development Curriculum" and the one in use was created for the high school and included such topics as building self-esteem, emotions and stress, communicating with others and solving problems effectively, eliminating self-destructive behaviors, how to help friends thinking about suicide, and planning ahead for a great future.

The participants mostly came from the northern plains and included, Emanuel Red Bear of Eagle Butte, Margo Rosas, Donita Loudner, Samantha Chase, Megan Garcia, Jacque Gray, Cheryl Taken Alive, Evelyn Goodhouse, Renee Yellow Earrings, Miskoo Petite, Charlotte Emery, Robert Critchlow and Tonya Boyd of the Todd County Schools, James Leader Charge and Hattie Dunham of the RST Tribal Education Department, Dan Foster of the Rosebud I.H.S. Hospital, Sylvan White Hat of Sinte Gleska University, Pearl Iron Shell of the Boys and Girls Clubs of Rosebud and Claude Two Elk of the RST tribal courthouse.

The cost of the training, room and board was provided by Kaufmann and Associates through the grant and it was limited to 25 participants. RST Tribal Education Director, Cindy Young, was instrumental in coordinating the training. Kaufmann and Associates will provide the "Native Aspirations" in other locations throughout the country and will be conducting a follow-up training at the Rosebud Casino at a date to be announced.

Gary Nuemann is the Director of the "Native Aspirations" project and he is assisted by trainers, Dr. Rachel Green of Oklahoma, Paulette Running Wolf of Montana, Ila McKay of Kansas, Elizabeth Rose and Freddie Hunter of Phoenix, Ariz.

Prairie Wind Casino celebrates opening with generosity

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett
Times Editor

PINE RIDGE - Last week, Prairie Wind Casino and Hotel officially celebrated the grand opening of their $20 million casino building and hotel with gifts, food and speeches.

On Friday morning, June 15 in front of the new casino, more than 100 people attended a ceremony with speeches and gift honoring, followed by a ribbon cutting ceremony to officially mark the grand opening.

Frank "PoPo" Means, who emceed the ceremony, recounted the time and events that lead to opening of the casino to the celebration of the day. He read many names, some that have journeyed on to the spirit world, that contributed to development and building of the casino. Some were honored with plaques.

Those attending the ceremony were Phil Hogan, Chairman of the National Indian Gaming Commission, Jesse Renteria of the National Indian Gaming Association, Kurt Luger of the Great Plains Indian Gaming Association, Michael Graham, Prairie Wind Casino general manager; Austin Watkins, Medicine Root tribal council representative and economic development committee chair; Ned Metcalf from Rosebud; and in attendance were council representatives Chuck Jacobs, Ron Duke, Garfield Little Dog, Big Crow.

Hogan acknowledged the tribal gaming commission for their work in the development of the casino and keeping it on the 'straight and narrow.' He said Indian gaming is designed to bring economic development to Indian country and Prairie Wind is doing that. The key is creating jobs.

Kurt Luger, executive director of the Great Plains Indian Gaming Association of Bismarck, N.D., said last year, Indian gaming contributed in 210 communities, $47 million worth of economic activity in the state, from electric companies to tool sheds and all of those were purchases of above $100,000 with 2,500 hundred jobs, 1,500 on tribal lands and we aren't getting enough credit for such an impact. Gaming contributes $135 million annually to the state.

"We are here to celebrate persistence and courage, the Oglalas are known for that," Luger said.

Graham, casino manager, said one of the casino's goals is to bring 100 Class II gaming machines to the casino in the future.

Peska Construction was honored for their work in the construction of the casino and hotel.

Also recognized was Lenart Brown Eyes, Rick Shangreaux, Tim Bullman and Margaret Lineberry for their work in getting the construction completed.

Raymond Big Crow, Phillip Zimiga, Jeanette Spoonhunter, Lorraine New and Rick Shangreau had the honors of cutting the ribbon across the casino entry way to mark the opening of the casino.

A barbeque was held after the ceremony with t-shirts distributed. On Thursday night, the casino hosted a free concert featuring Tanya Tucker and Restless Heart and on Friday night, about 200 people attended a Comedy Jam featuring native comedians.

The comedians Vaughn Eaglebear, originally from Norris; Jim Ruel, Ojibwe, from California; JR Redwater, Hunkpapa; and Milo Smith, Crow Creek, delivered a captivating show for the audience that ranged from rez humor to just entertaining comedy.

The Pow Wow Comedy Jam tour has done shows from tribal casinos and conferences to special invitations.

Other activities include cash giveaways with a $5,000 and a $10,000 giveaway on Saturday night.

As of last week, the Prairie Wind Casino Hotel is now open for business.

John Graham loses extradition appeal for 1975 Pine Ridge slaying

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) - A Yukon native has been taken into custody after a British Columbia court denied his appeal of an order that he be extradited to the United States to stand trial for a 1975 slaying in South Dakota.

The ruling against John Graham came Tuesday morning in Vancouver and his bail was immediately revoked, so he was taken to jail.

Graham had been under house arrest since he was charged in December 2003 with first-degree murder in the killing Anna Mae Pictou Aquash on Pine Ridge Indian Reservation in late 1975. Her body was found Feb. 24, 1976. The Nova Scotia native had been shot in the head.

Aquash's murder came amid a series of bloody clashes in the mid-1970s between federal agents and members of the American Indian Movement. Aquash, a member of Mi'kmaq Tribe of Canada, was among Indian militants who occupied Wounded Knee, S.D., for 71 days in 1973.

Prosecutors have said AIM leaders ordered Aquash's killing because they suspected she was a government informant. AIM leaders have denied that assertion.

The other man charged with killing Aquash, Fritz Arlo Looking Cloud, received a mandatory life sentence in 2004 after a federal jury in Rapid City, convicted him of first-degree murder committed in the perpetration of a kidnapping. A federal appeals court upheld the conviction.

Graham has said he's innocent, but a Canadian judge who issued a written ruling Tuesday disagreed.

"In my opinion, a properly instructed jury acting reasonably, could convict on the evidence that the appellant brought the deceased from Denver to South Dakota and there carried out her execution with the assistance of Looking Cloud," the judge wrote.

Witnesses at Looking Cloud's trial testified that Graham shot Aquash, whose family exhumed her body in 2004 from an Oglala grave and reburied it in Nova Scotia.

A Canadian judge ruled in 2005 that Graham should be extradited and the Canadian minister of justice affirmed that decision last year.

introduced to the American Indian Life Skills training model. The model basically calls for modeling of a skill to be taught, practicing the skills, feedback by teachers, and a discussion of experiences, while assigning homework.

Providing assessment to fellow students and the Kaufmann trainers was viewed as important after each training session. There was a very good cross section of students from the Rosebud area who represented the school district, the hospital, RST courthouse, SGU, and the RST tribal education department.

The students were given lessons and were expected to demonstrate a lesson from the text on anger, self-talk, anger, and finding our own power.

The teams represented the Crow Creek Sioux, Rosebud Sioux, Standing Rock Sioux, Cheyenne River Sioux and the Oglala Sioux.

Green said, "They are doing the high school curriculum at 35 minutes each and there is one for the middle school and elementary. This is an excellent group. They are very participatory. We have done this in several states. The lessons are multi-tribal.

People will know their own tribes and can implement the lessons."

Kyle plans July 4 events

KYLE - There will be a July 4th celebration for community at Medicine Root District on the Little Wound School football field.

There will be a parade at 10 a.m. with prizes, categories include Most Beautiful, Most Colored, Patriotic and Humorous. Other activities include costume contests; hot dog feed at noon, make and take booths at 2 p.m., ice cream social at 2 p.m., community feed at 5 p.m., free prize bingos at 6:30 p.m., children's games, and a tug of war.

There will be booths that will have sno cones, balloons, cotton candy and popcorn.

The evening before Medicine Root District will sponsors a feed on July 3. The Oyate Teca Project will sponsor a fishing derby and there will be a horseshoe and volleyball tournament.

There will be fireworks at dusk on the football field.

The events are sponsored by Little Wound School, Medicine Root District and Oyate Teca Project.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

How are you today? I hope all is good for you. Well I just wanted to write a letter to you and ask you a few questions concerning my family and I.

I surely hope you can help me. I'm still in high school and wonder how my future, education wise, is going to be like. I really do enjoy going to school, I also like to get involved in other activities. Lately I've been lacking in school and quitting sports that I'm in. This just isn't me. But I really want to know what sits in the future for me. I also want to become a pediatrician or some sort of doctor that will help people in poor countries.

Another question I would like to ask is how do you see things going for my mother? This year she just found out that she has arthritis. Do you see it clearing up? I love my mom very much and hate seeing her hands swell everyday. I don't want this for her, I pray for her a lot asking guidance and help for her. So please Anna can you fill me on some answers? Oh yeah, there's one more thing do you see any other person in my life right now?

Looking for answers!

Dear Looking for Answers:

I do see a health career - and it looks as though you will be working in orthopedics and rehabilitation for injured and handicapped people. That is a good career choice.

Almost everyone suffers a little burn out now and then. A constant diet with high performance expectation without a balance of relaxation and enjoyment leads to frustration and loss of interest and ambition. Life is about balance, so remember that and always allow yourself time to consider the joyful aspects of living: nature, family, food, reading, entertainment, self-improvement and introspection combined with meditation, and other self-interests. A change of scenery always is a good pressure valve release.

Please tell your mother that glucosamine with codrointen is a good supplement for arthritis. I also recommend massage and exercise. Lots of water and avoid foods high in sodium (i.e. pop).

Yoga works wonders with arthritis, particularly the bending and stretching. I recommend Kundalini Yoga by Germuke (DVD available at Borders), and although I would not expect anyone to keep up with the entire DVD when you first start - it is eventually attainable. When I do Kundalini Yoga I modify many of the aerobic parts and don't jump much - I just shift my weight from foot to foot and lean, rather than jump. The breathing will help release toxins that further solidify the effects of arthritis.

My business partner and I do wonderful work with arthritis. We work on a donation basis. Our type of healing is called Balance Point, and we feel that the Creator and the Spirits work through us to do the actual healing...we are just the instruments. If your mother is interested in an appointment just email the paper and they will let us know.

Your mom doesn't need to concentrate now on what is the matter with her body - that just enhances the pain. Instead, please tell her to focus on what is right. All pain in the body is reflected by some way of thinking in a person. Arthritis generally indicates some resistance to change - so the body becomes "stiff" and has trouble with flexibility.

Yes. I do see a boyfriend. He is quite tall and very thin. He has a little skin trouble and a great smile. His hair often gets in the way of his left eye.

Dear Anna,

I am previously, 'Wondering' from the Windy City, Chicago. I just had to write to you to 'thank you' for answering my letter and to tell you that I appreciate so much your reassurances about my mom. That response from you is so valuable to me and also to my own daughters. I pray God's protection over you and I give thanks for the wonderful gift of 'sight' that was given to you by the Creator.

Please, give me some insight on my future? I feel I have so much to offer and that I am wasting precious time. I need to get involved in something and I am at a loss. Please advise me. I don't want to leave this earth and have not given back or at least tried to make a difference. I would like to make some type of meaningful contribution to my people. But, I don't know where to start.

Help me to see where and what I could be used that could really impact. Not for 'celebrity' but, to be able to leave my mark, so to speak, and truly impact in someone life.

Wondering from the Windy City

Dear Wondering.

Blessings to you and thanks to you. I am blessed by many gifts from the Creator and so am very fortunate.

You are a wonderful person. You are helping everyday - through prayers, kind words, and in other ways as well (lending a helping hand to someone, a smile at a lonely person, etc.). Never underestimate your impact on others.

I do see you helping people at home. I see you gathering things together and sending them to the reservation. This is no small deal - it looks as though it is quite a bit of needed items (like a truck full).

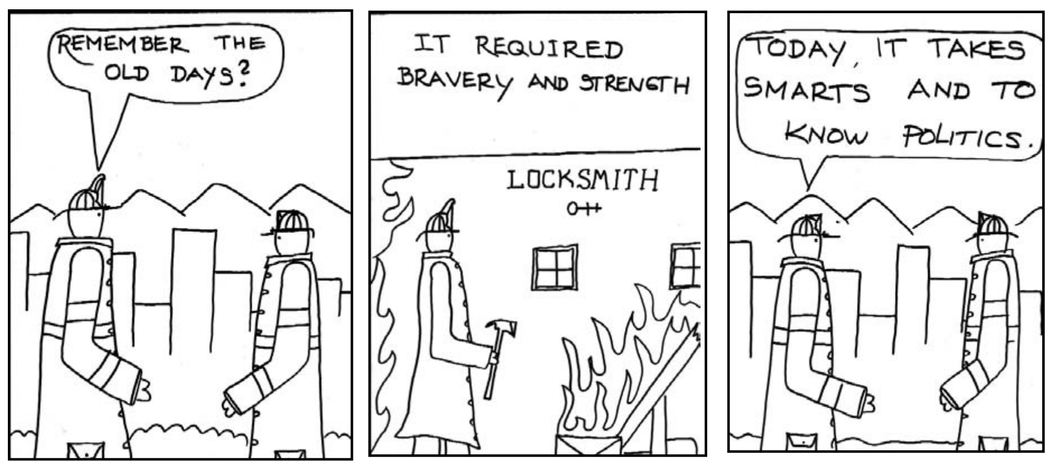
I do see you putting money together (grant?) and creating a fund for children that need special help. I happen to see clothing - but I think it goes far beyond that into providing services in behavior counseling and even braces on a young boy's legs.

I see knit items being sent. I see the hiring of some people from the reservation to come out to your area to make some sort of presentation (this creates a larger funding source and provides employment).

Give yourself time. You have also thought about a fund to create acknowledgment or scholarship for young students in art, music, dance and other traditional and inherent abilities.

Your mark is left on the Mother Earth with every prayer and with every breath. Your desire to help is the first prayer and it will be granted. The Creator Blesses you for your heart and for your will to help create a better Earth experience for The People.

You can email Anna Bee your questions at lakota1868@gwtc.net or fax to (605) 685-1870, or write to PO Box 386, Martin, S.D. 57551.



All requests may be subject to publication.

OST working hard to bring FEMA trailers to Pine Ridge

Steele requests 300 homes, over 4,000 needed

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - "We could use 4,000 plus homes here on Pine Ridge," said Paul Iron Cloud, past tribal president and executive director of housing and current member of tribal president John Steele's management team, "I just finished a conference call with the Bureau of Indian Affairs and we have until July 11 to put together a letter and background information on the need for homes we have here on Pine Ridge. The Bureau will look at all of the requests and the back up information and decide by the end of July on a formula to distribute the mobile homes."

There are thousands of vacant FEMA trailers sitting on lands in Arkansas and Texas. Originally the trailers were built and purchased to house people left without homes from the hurricanes in Louisiana and Mississippi but regulations prohibited placing the homes in flood plains on the Gulf Coast.

Senator Tim Johnson of South Dakota led a legislative initiative to allow FEMA to sell or donate the trailers to reservation communities. A study released in 2003 stated that there were approximately 90,000 Indian families homeless or living in sub-standard housing.

"There are over 200 tribes that have expressed interest in applying for the FEMA trailers," said Iron Cloud, "in HUD's Region VI there are 27 housing authorities that have expressed interest."

The Bureau is expected to have a formula put together by the end of July and once the distribution plan is in place, tribe's will have 15 days to move the trailers.

"It is my understanding that it will cost about $16,000 to move each trailer and set it down, anchor it and skirt it," said Iron Cloud, "we are looking at enough money to afford about 270 trailers, that would be 30 per district, we are work-

Nearly 10,000 emergency housing trailers that were intended to be sent to the Gulf Coast to help Hurricane Katrina victims have been freed up for other uses and have been made available for tribes. The Federal Emergency Management Agency parked some of the trailers at Hope Municipal Airport of Hope, Ark. in the months following the hurricane.

Rosebud seatbelt study shows more awareness needed

By Archie B. Beauvais

ROSEBUD - The summer months are likely very busy months for the Rosebud Comprehensive Healthcare facility as there is increased traffic flow and community celebrations that the Rosebud tribal membership is engaged in especially during the Fourth of July.

This flurry of activity is borne about by the increased revenue being reported in CEO, Shelly Harris' report to the council. The summer months generally appear to result in an above average amount of revenue from all third party resources.

There are other issues that appear to be emanating from the RCHC facility that warrant further explanation and in-depth clarification for not only the general tribal membership, but also for veterans who are very much concerned about their health and well-being. The hospital has been very forthcoming and sharing with such information and it is greatly appreciated.

A couple of months ago, Charles Mack of the environmental office could be heard on KINI FM radio explaining a seat belt study during a Sunday morning coffee show with deejay Perry DeCory. There were some features of the study which were quite revealing and spoke to the very low percentage of Rosebud Sioux tribal members who actually buckled up. It was a very dismal statistic and one which documented the need for a tribal ordinance to support a seat belt law, and thus, result in a decreased incidence of injury and death among reservation drivers through increased education.

Mack graciously provided a copy of the seat belt study at an earlier date; however, the highlights had not been published. The discussion on KINI FM radio was help-

Pine Ridge, Rosebud teams head for Native American Basketball Invitational

Hoop Divas took second last year in national tournament

PINE RIDGE/KYLE/MISSION - The South Dakota Hoop Divas will lead three girl's teams and one boy's team from South Dakota to this year's fifth annual Native American Basketball Invitational in Phoenix, Ariz.; the Divas are trying to improve on their second place finish in last years tourney losing to the Navajo Nation Lady Cats 53-51 on a buzzer beating shot.

"We are as ready as we can be, we're excited, relaxed and in good shape," said Tiny DeCory, Divas head coach, "we have played 78 games since the high school season wrapped up in March; we have played in Nebraska, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, North Dakota, Wyoming and all over South Dakota, we have played in tournaments, team camps and we have played all star teams and now we are ready for this national 40 team tournament that plays their championship game in the Phoenix Suns and Mercury's home arena."

The 2007 Diva roster includes Lacy Weston, Sophia, Christian and Allie Janis, Robin Webber, Nichelle Red Owl, Saudia Tasso, Kali Brave and Keisha Brewer with Decory as head coach and Will Good Eagle assisting. The Divas open on Monday, July 9 at 8:30 a.m. against Gila River from Sacaton, Ariz.; they play NCFST from Toronto, Ontario, Canada at 8:30am on Wednesday and the Gym Rats from Lame Deer, Mont. Wednesday evening at 7:10 pm. Following pool play, each team is seeded into a single elimination tournament which finishes in the U.S. Airways Arena on Saturday night.

Coming off of a 24-2 high school season and a second place finish in the South Dakota State A tournament, Little Wound is playing in their last tournament together as the Lakota Regulators.

The team leaves Saturday evening and flies out of Denver Saturday morning. Their first game is Monday, July 9 at 9:50 a.m. against the Yakama Nation out of Wapato, Wash. They play the defending champs, the SBT Shockwave from ft. Hall , Idaho Monday night at 8:30 p.m. and finish pool play with Fort Mojave from Needles, Calif.

ing with Rural Development, looking at rewriting the tribe's bond, asking Shakopee for help and working on a proposal to the Indian Health Service."

According to Iron Cloud, the tribe plans to send a delegation to Arkansas to look at the trailers after July 11 but he adds we just do not know how many will be given to the Oglala Sioux Tribe.

"John Steele would like to request as many as 300 but depending on the Bureau's formula, we could get anywhere from five to 350," said Iron cloud, "once we know how many we will receive, it will be up to the council to determine how many will go to each district and how they will be distributed in the district."

At the present time, Oglala Sioux Lakota Housing manages 1,700 homes on the reservation; housing has 27 new home ownership houses that have not been completed and 52 Ellsworth units that have been sitting in the housing yard in Kyle for over a year and a half waiting for a decision on how they will be distributed and completed.

"We are doing everything we can to put together as much resources as possible for these trailers," said Iron Cloud, "we have been getting all kinds of calls about the trailers, how many we are going to get, how will they be distributed on the reservation but we are dependent on the Bureau and the formula they put together so we just do not know how many the tribe will receive - we will let people know as soon as we can and we have asked for a compilation of all of the available tribal land in each district, we have to be ready to move on this as soon as possible."

ful in focusing upon the consequences of not wearing seat belts and points out the need to continue to build on such studies which may justify the need for legislation and punitive measures for protecting the tribal membership.

A number of organizational changes were announced in the tribal council report, including pharmacy reconstruction, a release of information window, a UPS system for the radiology CAT scan machine and a nursing call light system. New hires at the hospital included a podiatrist, a nurse practitioner/midwife, an emergency room physician and an obstetrician.

Finally, the third party collections as reported by the hospital, including Medicare, Medicaid, and private insurance totaled $9,296,471 to-date and appeared to represent 92 percent of the agencies collection goals.

A couple of other issues that will be explained to the tribal membership include a letter which was sent out to veterans a couple of months ago explaining that the I.H.S. was considered the "payer of last resort."

There was a recent change in Medicare billing and that issue along with the letter to Sicangu veterans will also be explained very shortly by the hospital in a series of notices.

Everett Janis celebrates 75 years

KYLE - Last week on Thursday, June 28, the family of Everett Janis (right) honored him with birthday celebratiion at Little Wound School. Janis of Medicine Root District, has given more than 20 years service to the educational field by serving on the Little Wound School board and other boards. A meal was served with birthday cake. Rev. Lyle Noisy Hawk (above left) was one of several speakers at the honoring. Other speakers includes Chris Eagle Hawk, Wayne Weston and Janis's daughter Melanie Janis.

Vital records law changes July 1

PIERRE – Beginning July 1, parents who experience a stillbirth will be able to request a certificate of birth resulting in a still birth, thanks to legislation passed during the 2007 session. Under current statute, the Department of Health issues a fetal death certificate, which is combination of the birth and death record, when there is a stillbirth.

"During testimony parents of stillborn infants made clear that as part of the grieving process, they wanted a document that reflected the birth of their child, not just the death," said Kathlene Mueller, State Vital Registrar for the department. "For that reason, certificates of birth resulting in a still birth will be available for any fetal death already on file in our office."

Mueller said the certificate for birth resulting in a stillbirth will be issued only at the state level, not at county registers of deeds offices.Another vital records law change going into effect July 1 will allow customers to request a list of marriage records. Each register of deeds can provide a list of marriages for the licenses issued by that county with the state able to provide a full list. The list will include name, age, residence and place of marriage for marriages occurring after July 1, 2007. There is no charge for the list.

LAKOTA LANGUAGE SURVEY RESULTS

Oceti Wakan, a small non-profit, in Calico Community on the Pine Ridge Reservation has been doing a systematic house to house survey in each of the nine Districts on Pine Ridge Reservation to see the health of the Lakota language on our reservation. This has been funded by an ANA (Administration for Native Americans) grant. Last week they reported Pine Ridge District and Porcupine District representing 2,985 tribal members. There have been close to 9,000 people who have been surveyed on the Reservation. Oceti Wakan mission is for the preservation of Lakota language and culture. We have developed books and CDs on both.

We would like to share with the community the results for each District with the people. As you will be able to see, we are in serious jeopardy of losing the Lakota language. We hope these results that we will be publishing over the next several weeks will help us break the denial of just how serious this is.

Alex White Plume's endeavor to grow hemp will be broadcast in a "Point of View" documentary

By Chet Brokaw
Associated Press

MANDERSON -- Alex White Plume hoped his extended family could make a good living growing hemp when he first planted seeds on his land near Wounded Knee, but years of fighting with federal drug officials have left him in financial trouble.

The White Plume family planted hemp for three years from 2000 through 2002, but they never harvested a crop. Federal agents conducted raids and cut down the plants each year because U.S. law considers hemp, a cousin of marijuana, to be a drug even though it contains only a trace of the drug in marijuana.

"We had all these plans of grandeur and independence, to lead the way with industrial hemp," White Plume said. "None of it worked out."

White Plume plans to sell much of his ranching operation this fall. He said he probably can keep his house and at least some of his buffalo that graze among the pine-dotted ridges that give the reservation its name. His horses, a truck with license plates reading "HEMP," and other equipment likely will be sold to pay off some of his debts.

But even though White Plume lost a court case last year, he is ready to resume the cultivation of hemp if the federal government ever allows it.

The plant could help boost the economy of the Oglala Sioux Tribe's poverty-stricken reservation, where unemployment is estimated to be as high as 85 percent, he said.

"I could never climb back up to where I was, but I still believe in hemp, so we're going to continue to struggle," White Plume said.

The family's attempt to grow hemp, which is used to make rope, oils, skin lotion, cloth and a variety of other products, is featured in a "Point of View" documentary that will be broadcast Tuesday on Public Broadcasting Service stations nationwide. The film started as a look at hemp growing, but it grew to include a look at Indian treaties and the Lakota culture and tradition, according to filmmakers Suree Towfighnia and Courtney Hermann.

Alex White Plume's hemp story will air on Public Broadcasting on Tuesday.

An important part of the story, filmed periodically over a five-year period, deals with the emphasis on extended family among the Lakota, Towfighnia said during a recent visit to White Plume's home. "People can learn from the Lakota way of life because it's a beautiful way of life."

White Plume said he used to run a successful trail ride business, but that faltered after the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks because fewer European tourists visited the United States.

He said he became interested in growing hemp in 1998 after seeing country star Willie Nelson promote it. The Oglala Sioux Tribe also passed a measure legalizing the growing of hemp on the reservation.

The tribal law should have been enough to allow hemp farming because of the sovereignty granted to the Lakota by treaties, White Plume said.

White Plume planted hemp on his land in 2000, planning to make money by selling the seed to others, but U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration agents cut down his plants a few days before he intended to harvest them. The DEA also seized similar plantings by his brother and sister in the next two years.

"All that left us in debt and demoralized, trying to figure out what to do because our sovereignty was directly attacked," White Plume said.

But he laughs when he talks about the hemp plants that still grow on his land, even right outside the back door of his house. The plants spread from seeds knocked off during the DEA raid, he said.

"When the DEA used their weed whackers to cut my plants down, they reseeded it something awful," said White Plume, a former vice president of the Oglala Sioux Tribe.

White Plume never was charged with a crime, but the DEA sued him and got a court order to bar him from growing hemp. He argued that the Fort Laramie Treaty of 1868 gave the Sioux the right to grow hemp.

The 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals last year ruled against White Plume, saying the treaty did not give tribal members the right to grow the plant. Hemp is also subject to federal drug laws, which require a DEA permit to grow the plant in both its marijuana and hemp forms, the appeals judges said.

"We are not unmindful of the challenges faced by members of the Tribe to engage in sustainable farming on federal trust lands. It may be that the growing of hemp for industrial uses is the most viable agricultural commodity for that region," the appeals judges wrote.

The appeals court also noted that hemp is used to make many useful products, and the DEA registration process imposes a burden on anyone seeking to grow hemp legally.

"But these are policy arguments better suited for the congressional hearing room than the courtroom," the appeals judges wrote.

White Plume's lawyer, Bruce Ellison of Rapid City, said courts have consistently declined to give much consideration to Indian treaties. And the hemp law should be struck down because it is not rational, he said.

"The only argument against it is fears based upon misleading information or misinformation that it can somehow be used as a drug or to hide drugs or something like that, which it can't," Ellison said.

Those who oppose legalizing hemp have argued that law officers could have difficulty determining whether plants are drug-laden marijuana or hemp that has only a trace of the drug.

The best hopes for the White Plume family and other farmers who want to grow hemp are measures in Congress and North Dakota's effort to get the DEA to issue licenses for the production of hemp, Ellison said.

North Dakota has authorized hemp growing and issued the nation's first state licenses to grow hemp, but the two farmers with state licenses could face legal problems without DEA permits. The DEA has not acted yet on the farmers' applications, and the farmers filed a lawsuit two weeks ago asking a federal judge to let them grow hemp without being subject to federal criminal charges.

Vote Hemp, an industrial hemp advocacy organization, says North Dakota is one of seven states that have authorized industrial hemp farming.

White Plume said he and his family has gone through some tough times, particularly when they were uncertain whether federal officials would charge them with drug crimes for growing hemp.

He also had to endure jokes that implied he was really growing a drug.

"That was the hardest, hardest time," he said.

White Plume now intends to spend time working on environmental protection and treaty issues, such as an effort to regain the Black Hills that were taken from the Lakota more than 125 years ago.

And if farmers ever are allowed to grow hemp, he's ready to plant another crop.

"We didn't give up our struggle. We still want to grow hemp and we still got all our plans in shape," White Plume said.

"It's not a drug plant," he said.

Iris Gay uses matching savings, loan program to buy quilting machine

KYLE - Iris Gay wanted to increase her output of quilts from her home based business.

She knew what she needed to do to find a simple quilting machine that would be user friendly, easy to operate, and only cost a few thousand dollars.

She knew that Lakota Funds offered the ideal asset building program to do this.

First, she committed to increasing her own financial literacy and her knowledge of how to run a business by systematically saving in the Individual Development Account program.

Taffey Lafferty, loan portfolio manager; Iris Gay, Fairuz Dakam and Tony Taylor, loan officer pose with a check presentation of the loan Gay recieved using the savings and loan project.

As an IDA participant, she not only built her personal financial capital by getting an infusion of dollars from the two to one match Lakota Funds provided her, but she also attended financial literacy, credit repair, business planning sessions, and group discussions with other savers.

Tonia Young, business success coach, was her guidance though the IDA program and Lakota Funds will continue to provide her additional technical assistance as she's on her way to success.

Next, through the business planning course she began developing plans for her business, obtained a tribal business license, and began developing a loan application.

Jason Brave Heart became her success coach on this leg of her journey.

When her IDA account was built up to the point she could make a substantial down payment on the machine, she applied for a loan under the micro lending category that only requires a cash flow projection, credit score, some collateral, along with business and personal financial records and her personal guarantee to be reviewed by the loan staff and the executive director. With her personal integrity and commitment, Iris is pursuing her dream of owning her own business.

Gay, first time borrower of Lakota Funds, is using her loan and the money she earned through the IDA savings program to purchase a high quality quilting machine to enhance productivity in meeting the demands of her customers and the potential to attract new clients.

Gay has been making quilts of excellent craftsmanship by hand for 20 years. Iris is the first IDA participant to use her proceeds as equity in obtaining a loan from the Lakota Funds to start up a business. Iris pledges, "To provide high quality machine quilting at reasonable prices."

State hunting season to take lions is causing concern for tribe

RAPID CITY - The state declared hunting season in early June that would allow hunters to take 35 lions and 15 of those could be female. The hunting season is causing concern for Trudy Ecoffey, a senior wildlife biologist for the Oglala Sioux Tribe.

Ecoffey, who studies mountain populations on the Pine Ridge reservation presented data to a meeting of the Prairie Hills Audubon Society and in which she noted that there have been 150 sightings of lions on the reservation and 25 percent of those were verified. She believes that there are between 6-8 lions there and is concerned that all licensed hunters statewide can now hunt for a lion. Previously, only landowners who have a prairie license could hunt.

Ecoffey operates on a grant from the U. S. Fish and Wildlife and is concerned that lions which wonder off the Pine Ridge reservation could be hunted.

Regional Game, Fish and Wildlife supervisor John Kanta said that he does not believe that there is a population of lions on the Pine Ridge reservation and that the GF&P is not interested in managing lions outside of the Black Hills.

Ecoffey said that her board would like to be informed of any hunting activity that occurs near the Pine Ridge reservation.

Bible school students from Iowa do outreach on the Rosebud

ROSEBUD - On June 16, there was a group of 24 eighth grader non-denominational bible school students from Ames, Iowa who were camped out at the Rosebud veteran's affairs building. The youngsters and their eight chaperones used the building as their home base while out doing works of generosity during the day.

Pastor Joel Vint served as the spokesman for the group as they were making preparations to return home. The youngsters had selected the Rosebud community for their social and Christian outreach. Upon their arrival they proceeded to offer a free car wash by the tribal building and got 40 some takers. They also went into the neighborhood around Rosebud and simply played with the kids and drank Kool-Aid and shared other treats with them.

The youth raised their own money to make the journey out to the Rosebud and they arrived in two buses. "We want to take a holistic approach to helping the elderly, the middle age and others. We also listened to Darlene Meyers.

We would love to learn the history of the people." Vint noted that the group met a lot of local people, including RST tribal president, Rodney M. Bordeaux.

A youth view of the White Clay issue

By Duane Two Bulls
Pine Ridge Reservation
Special to the Times

Hello to the Lakota Oyate:

It has been two months since I have written, just this past Wednesday I walked into a room and seen what had happened at Whiteclay. I commend Alec Morgan for the breakup in Whiteclay I might also add that I was rather shocked to see Russell Means in cuffs being dragged off to Pine Ridge Jail.

What had happened with the blockade really stunned me to see what Duane, Russell and other individuals were doing for this blockade and I personally think it was a bad thing from the start…and remember I am just a 14-year old individual trying to make this "rez life" possible.

I commend the Chief of Police James Twiss for having his co workers act on scene right away. I also commend my mother Connie Two Bulls-Lund because she deals with alcoholics everyday she takes a step into the Pine Ridge jail. I can see where the alcohol problems affect the reservation and the people of the reservation but the people who put this blockade up, went about this issue the whole wrong way. Not meaning to say that this blockade was a 'bad' thing and I don't think that it was a good thing either… because the alcohol has been coming from not only Whiteclay but there is Martin, Interior, Kadoka, and as for Red Shirt the alcohol comes in from Hermosa and Rapid, so just say that it was a disaster waiting to happen. Alcohol seemed to already do the damage in families on the rez.

I have some family members who live lives revolved around alcohol, drugs, and Whiteclay, I am honest about that factor because I always see them in the poorest condition and it hurts me to see my fading away from other wise the Two Bulls Family and/or the Brown Bull family. My father/uncle Duane Two Bulls passed away from a alcoholic related issue and that really made me against alcohol and drugs

For one certain thing I know that alcohol is EVERYWHERE on the rez, if you don't see it in one community (which is very unlikely) you would see it in another community. When you deal with alcohol, you are like dealing with kids and I am tired of seeing and hearing of alcohol damaging families on the rez.

I am sorry if this article is upsetting but this is my firm belief of how I think about this issue and to stay alcohol and drug free. Alcohol and drugs really, really misrepresents the Oglala Sioux Tribe and the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation. That refers to the alcoholics and druggies on the rez and again I am not saying that fate brought the reservation to this conclusion.

I will tell you this the people on the west coast think that we still live in tipis and they hear of the reservation and they see how poor we are, how violent we are, how hostile we are, and how lack of dignity we have and the list goes on. Literally this is stupid of how the U.S. Government really labeled as poor and that we always have no money. From the statistics of 2006 (courtesy of google.com) it states that 74 percent of the Pine Ridge Reservation's population is unemployed and a Oglala Sioux is expected to live to 46 years of age and substandard housing is six times the national average and the annual income for the tribe is $2,600 per year whereas it is supposed to be $14,420 per year.

Also 66 percent of the population of the reservation lives under poverty, every winter elderly die due to the cold and lack of heat so they die of hypothermia, and an average Pine Ridge teen would kill themselves three times more often than the average American teen, less than 1 percent has a bachelor's degree or higher, Diabetes and tuberculosis rates are 800 percent higher than the national average. So to all you readers this is what the Federal Government labeled us (OST) and also they labeled us in debt that was the 2006 reservation statistics so the OST is somewhat hopeless because of its people.

So with that I conclude and so really the reservation is a nightmare to foreigners that come to the reservation because of the gang violence.

I personally feel that if the younger generations stand up today and take leadership as a priority, I think that we will be better off in a better tribal government because there will be less corruption and we will maybe reach our goal and get ourselves out of this big 'poor hole' that we put ourselves in and then we will have better yearly statistics from the Federal Government. I hope this message will get out to some individuals who may take a step forward and have a actual purpose for the rez!

So with that I conclude and I wish the best to you, the reader and your families!

Let's help our children dreams come true for tomorrow

Dear Editor:

Annexing for better future, winning the conquest. Mobilizing activity of ideology challenging innovation, the new age of the horizon.

Adaptability to transform ourselves to a better future, embracing education, the communication infrastructure. The independents of one's dreams, the individual achievements, the importance of one's dreams. The prestige ambitions of competition in particulars of technological advances to develop the fertile ground to change for the betterment of the future.

Such possibilities lay just beyond the horizon. To take that step one needs education, and a dream to make that dream come true. For our future is our children, and their children. We need to take that step by not being arrogant toward our children and their needs and emphasize their dreams.

What are the possibilities of our future? For their talents and success is the fulfillment of life.

The quest for the ultimate future lays beyond the horizon and our investment for our future. We now live in the string theory age and unification where its at.

For our children, dream should be our aspirations to our future, the quantum leap of achievement. Let's help our children dreams come true for tomorrow.

Reader enjoys column about Wakinyan

Dear Editor:

The June 14 column of Amanda Takes War Bonnett reflects excellence in living, writing and knowledge of this life. Ms. Takes War Bonnet's respect for Wakinyan is at once generous and inspirational. I can smell cedar of her father's prayer. I can feel the power of thunderclouds 'charge through the sky.' Concepts of courage to learn new things and saving money for a weather radio lend strength for this or any day.

Thank you for the work of Amanda Takes War Bonnett. Our world is a richer place when she writes.

Words from the 'trenches'

The wonderful feeling of 'Retirement?'

Connie Smith-Blanco

My 'slightly' older, only sister drove up from Texas to spend the month of June with me and my family. It is now July 2 and she is almost ready to start her trip back to Texas with her devoted pooch, 'Rookie.' What started off as a "by the way, I'm coming to visit you now that I'm retired and have time on my hands" turned into a "by the way, I'm coming to live in Martin again, now that I'm retired and have time on my hands."

Of course I'm excited (I moved back six years ago and haven't regretted it since), my parents are dubious ('remember when you were a teenager and you left town saying 'I'm never moving back here.'), and her many Texas friends were shocked ('Is this a mid-life crisis or did she hit a prairie dog hole and shake a screw loose driving across the Badlands to South Dakota?').

We'll never know and we'll never ask. The main thing is, she's all excited to leave the rat race of Texas behind and join the Martin snow shovel club. She's wasting no time. She found a house, rented a post office box, opened a bank account, ordered new checks, and most important, said to me "you'll have to go with me to buy a winter coat." She knows she doesn't need the coat in this triple digit weather, but it shows she hasn't lost any of her organizational skills. And this should show her Texas friends that she still has all her screws, even if they are a little loose.

Is she too young to retire at 50 something? Of course she is. But who can argue with her hard earned Police Pension, you sure don't see many of those anymore. Will she be bored leaving a city of 40,000 to add one more number to Martin's population of 1,011? Of course she won't. As the saying goes, she's 'been there, done that!' And for city excitement she can drive to Rapid City where she'll see half of Martin on any given week-end.

She's a techie and keeps in touch with her friends and the world through the internet. (Her entire trip to South Dakota was posted on her friend's website, complete with pictures and almost daily postings. I had to blackmail her not to post the picture she took of me bending over my first grandchild and her first birthday cake.) Yes, I love my sister, but I will resort to threats if I have to, like the fact I have plenty of pictures of her picking her nose, that I can publish in this newspaper if I'm forced to.

She's so techie she has a business on E-bay that she simply has to unplug in Texas and plug back in, here in Martin. And everyone at my house likes the idea of her moving back here.

She actually puts three squares a day on the table while I'm working here at the paper. Every time I turn around she's cooking or baking something. My kids want to adopt her and let her move in permanently.

"We can't adopt her I tell them, we're already related (besides, she's making me look bad. She hardly did any of those things when she worked full-time). Remember the magic word here, it's called 'retirement! Even Manuel and Amanda love her personally delivered, afternoon snacks of individual containers of double-chocolate ice-cream.

My parents and my aunts and my cousins are looking forward to seeing her on a regular basis, as they turn to me and say, "we never see Connie because she's' always working." Job offers have not stopped coming in for her and when folks find out she won't actually be moving here until September they all say "what's taking so long?"

If it sounds like I'm a 'little bit' jealous I probably am.

I have no idea what it would be like to retire at 50-something. However, being the 'slightly younger still working sister' does have its' advantages.

I'm not afraid to ask her for a 'little' help if I get in a pinch! After all, the magic word is 'retirement' and that's a most unusual thing, here in the trenches!

What happened at Barre, Mass.

By Rick Lennox
rhlennox@msn.com

As one of the organizers of Saturday, June 30 demonstration on the Barre Common in Barre, Mass., I would like to set the record straight. Until this latest attempt to repatriate the sacred items in the museum in Barre, the library/museum's own website trumpeted the collection there as being from the site of the Wounded Knee massacre. Only since we began our efforts last fall has the website been changed to remove all mention of "Wounded Knee." Now, the library director is claiming that the items housed there are not even authentic, that they are tourist reproductions. How, then, would he explain that in 1993 a Lakota delegation traveled from Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota in an attempt to recover the items in the museum? That delegation did, in fact, manage to reclaim one item -- a lock

Northern Perspectives

Combining education with wisdom

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

In Lakota society the things we say are not always cut and dried as we essentially live in two worlds. Let me explain. As we work very hard to survive in this new technological age there are a lot of competing interest and distractions which are not only breaking down Mother Earth, but also the ability of different ethnic cultures to survive.

Even the latest revelation that half of the people in the world are now living in cities is a change that indirectly impacts us. Many Lakota people visit cities regularly while many also live there and pursue a living. White society calls it "brain drain" when the young choose to leave the area and work elsewhere. It is especially damaging if many of the best and the brightest do not come home after their education and training to make a difference. As a result we become complacent because the up and coming young people with potential are not coming behind us and it leaves a void.

We are taught that wisdom and foresight lies with the elderly and we have come to expect their participation when people come together.

Even that has changed, or it may be a function of my getting older, as the elders no longer are the dominant spokespersons at gatherings anymore. When I was young, it was expected that we would hear a lecture or a lengthy explanation of the history behind some event and it was something that we more than likely retained. It was like the elders had you cornered and you had to listen before taking part in a nutritious meal or an anticipated giveaway and the wait was worthwhile.

The advice that the elders often dispensed is called "wahohonkiye" and it could mean to instruct or advise. I think it was a technique that worked especially if the recipient of the advice played a willing part. If we are willing to learn cultural advice then it is there to for the taking.

Apparently getting rid of bad emotional energy really is something that scientist can see now through new imaging devices and it is beneficial when we get rid of such energy simply through saying it and letting it go.

As we necessarily adapt to that changing world we have to bring all the skills we have learned to the table as we compete with the white man. There are outside criteria, standards, and expectations that our children are expected to meet if they want to be successful when they venture out. It's okay if we use the western "wasicu" education we learned to help guide our young so that they will one day be successful to.

It was never a requirement that Lakota people had to do mathematics, science or be able to write a research paper, but it has become increasingly important that our children do that even if we would prefer that they follow a traditional Lakota lifestyle.

I have arrived at a place where I know that I have a bit of wisdom and hindsight gained through living on the "rez" and being able to combine that with my western education has allowed me teach and assist others. I cannot say that education is better than wisdom or vice-versa, but when we are able to combine life's experiences with whatever we have been fortunate enough to gain in the classroom it can be a good thing.

Dr. Archie Beauvais, (Sicangu) earned his Doctor of Education (Ed.D) degree from Harvard University and currently works as the director of the Lakota language preservation project for the Rosebud Sioux Tribe. Functionally fluent in the Lakota language, Dr. Beauvais continues to pursue a professional interest that is forever enlightening.

Lakota artifacts of hair belonging to Chief Big Foot, the leader of a band of Lakota who were among the victims of the massacre. Was the lock of hair a tourist reproduction?

We who gathered in Barre on Saturday were assured earlier that the museum would be open and available to us, even though yesterday was not the usual day for the display being open to the public. When we arrived, we found the museum locked and guarded. Rebecca Three Stars traveled from South Dakota to see the relics belonging to her ancestors, and she was turned away...We tried to arrange a meeting between anyone from the museum board of trustees and Three Stars and/or other Lakota representatives. Naturally, no one was available from the museum. Ann Meilus, an attorney and the director of the board of trustees, had more important business to attend to; she was out of town, helping a friend move.

We were very grateful to see that Meilus had her priorities straight. Clearly, it was more important to her to help a friend move than to meet with people who had traveled 1500 miles or more in an attempt to reclaim sacred items that belonged to their ancestors.

Please do not be taken in by the evasions and obfuscations of the library/museum people.

Every attempt of ours to repatriate these items, every argument we have advanced, has been met with a new and different set of lies, a different rewriting of history, a different excuse for the continued refusal to return these items to their rightful owners...If the items in the library are in fact not authentic, then why the reluctance to return them. If the items are fakes, they can have no monetary value at all. The Lakota people on several occasions have offered to make reproductions of the items in the museum and swap them for the items on display, and each time the museum has found a reason not to make the trade. Why is that, if the items on display are fakes? Why has the museum removed all mention of the display being from Wounded Knee. It's pretty transparent, isn't it?

Incidentally, to refer to the incident at Wounded Knee as a battle or to the place as a "battlefield" does a grave injustice to the Lakota people who perished there and to their descendants. What happened at Wounded Knee was NOT a battle; it was most certainly a massacre. The few Native warriors there had already been disarmed when the shooting began; most of the victims were women and children and the elderly; the 7th Cavalry soldiers who were killed were caught in their own crossfire, not killed at the hands of Native people. A complicated set of circumstances led up to this massacre, but many people believe that one major factor was that the 7th Cavalry was allowed to be involved, just 13 years after that same 7th Cavalry unit was soundly defeated by the Lakota and Cheyenne, resulting in the death of General George Custer at the battle of the Little Bighorn.

We were pleased that the Channel 7 News of the area mentioned twice that the museum display had been locked yesterday.

I guess we are to assume that the museum staff locked up a display of worthless tourist junk. Why not let knowledgeable people into the display to verify that the items are in fact not authentic?

As I hope you can see, there are a lot of questions surrounding this display and especially the people who are responsible for the display. We would be most appreciative if Channel 7 News chose to pursue this story further. No one gains from trying to understand the original motivations of the people who looted the Lakota bodies at Wounded Knee and sold the relics, nor those of the people who bought those relics and sold or donated them to this museum and others like it around the country. However, one can expect that, in our relatively enlightened age, the current possessors of these items should be expected to act responsibly and ethically. What we have here is an idyllic little New England town, with a cute little library/museum holding the spiritual lives of many Lakota people hostage. It's wrong, and it should be illegal, and it certainly should be brought to light.

The history of the massacre at Wounded Knee and the events leading up to it make fascinating reading. The story is complex and heart-breaking.

The situation is a microcosm of European treatment of Native people all over the continent. I encourage you to do your homework, learn the particulars of the massacre, and continue to pursue the actions of the staff at the Barre Library/Museum.

I also thank you very much on behalf of all of the people working to right the egregious wrong being perpetrated in Barre. Our job will not be finished until the items in the museum are back in Lakota hands.

Thanks again, and please feel free to contact me or any of the other involved people. I can be reached at this email address, or go to www.barretowoundedknee.org for a contact list of people involved in this effort.

Sincerely,

Notes From Indian Country

Thomas Sowell, out of sight, out of mind and out of touch

By Tim Giago
(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Thomas Sowell is a nationally syndicated columnist who happens to be an African American. He is also a senior fellow at the Hoover Institute at Stanford University. I am sure that he is an expert at the things he normally writes about, but he is an abject failure when it comes to writing about Native Americans.

I am often taken aback at writers who take on the challenge of writing about something they know little or nothing about. What happens in most cases is that the writer not only makes a fool of himself, but he also imparts information that is false, ineffectual and worse yet, damaging to the people he is writing about. This is what happened when Mr. Sowell decided to write about the Navajo people.

Mr. Sowell and his wife were on vacation and happened upon some Navajo boys on what he determined was "a Navajo reservation." Perhaps his column would have taken a different slant if he had referred to the homeland of the boys correctly as "the Navajo Nation."

He surmised that the boys were "bright and cheerful lads" but when asked in what state Pittsburgh was located "none of them knew." Mr. Sowell explained away this phenomenon by writing, "The most likely explanation was that they were being taught other things, things considered 'relevant' to their life and culture on the reservation."

Mr. Sowell surmised that any culture, whether in or out of the mainstream, is not just a badge of identity or a museum piece to be admired by others. "A culture is a tool for serving the many practical purposes of life, from making a living or to curing diseases. As a tool it has to change with the ever changing tasks that confront every culture as time goes on," he wrote.

Say what? For the information of Mr. Sowell and his readers, there is probably no ethnic minority that has been forced to go through such dramatic changes in the past 100 years as Native Americans.

Not only have they managed to survive with a foot in two distinctly different worlds, but they have managed to maintain their traditions, culture, language and spirituality also.

If Mr. Sowell had taken more than just a passing interest in the land he passed through, perhaps he would have discovered that the Navajo Nation has its own law enforcement, judiciary, government, elementary and high schools, and a wonderful college system all functioning with a high degree of intelligence, diligence and with a success that is the envy of many in Indian country.

Oprah Winfrey made the same lame observations as Mr. Sowell when she visited the Navajo Nation several months ago. She asked tribal members to stage a pow wow for her entertainment and her cameras even though pow wows are not the traditional fare of the Navajo people. Since no pow wow was forthcoming, she created one with old films for her television show not knowing that the attire worn by the dancers was that of the Indians of the Northern Plains and not the Navajo.

If Mr. Sowell had visited Denmark and ran across some Danish boys who did not know what state Pittsburgh was located, would he have admonished them for not getting outside of their culture?

Mr. Sowell writes, "Unfortunately, in this age of multiculturalism, there are too many outsiders who want all sorts of cultures to remain frozen where they are, preserved like museum exhibits."

Oh, if that were only so, Mr. Sowell. An attempt was made by the "outsiders" to strip the American Indian of everything that set him apart as a unique race. Schools were established to strip him of his language. Food was distributed that would create a generation of diabetics. Outsiders converged on the Indian nations to forbid and then strip the Indian of his religious beliefs. The Indian was forced to adapt to the religion of a foreign culture, a foreign language, foreign customs, foreign housing and even foreign medicine.

No the Native American did not remain "frozen where they are," but instead adapted, absorbed, took the good from the new culture, abandoned the bad, and then got on with a way of life that was adjustable to both cultures.

They did not "nurse historic grievances" as Mr. Sowell implies, but fought for their rights as sovereign nations. In order to protect and save what was already theirs, they had to take on the government and the corporations of America. They won historic battles for their water rights, land rights and human rights. They fought for the return of their traditional religions and language and to them; this was not stepping back in time, but bringing time back into balance for their people.

Please understand Mr. Sowell, that the Navajo boys you saw on their bicycle tour were citizens of the Navajo Nation as well as citizens of the United States and like many Native Americans, oftentimes their loyalty begins with their own Indian nation and like the Navajo Code Talkers you praise, their lives oftentimes end in defense of not only the Navajo Nation, but also for the United States of America.

Consider yourself lucky, Mr. Sowell, to be a senior fellow at the Hoover Institute at Stanford University, because my research tells me that there has never been a tribally enrolled American Indian accepted in that prestigious institute.

Oversight? One wonders.

I hope that in the future you take the time to learn about a people before you write condescendingly and disparagingly about them. And please accept this as constructive criticism.

Pine Ridge's Rez Runblerz finish undefeated Saturday in Rapid City

RAPID CITY - Dave "Bull Dawg" Michaud led a five man Pine Ridge Runblerz team to Rapid City Saturday for the Ringwars 14, South Dakota's premier Mixed Martial Arts competition; Michaud competing in the middleweight division (171-185 pounds) knocked out previously undefeated Derrick Lang of Gillette, Wyo. in 13 seconds of the first round earning a title fight on Aug. 7 at Ringwars 15.

Michaud graduated from Pine Ridge High School in May as his class valedictorian, earned all state and all American honors in football, won the 189 pound division wrestling state championship at 189 pounds and earned the prestigious Jim Thorpe Award.

He was named a Gates Scholar this past spring and will attend South Dakota State University in the fall, majoring in journalism and playing football for the NXAA Division IAA Jackrabbits.

MMA is a fast growing sport in the U.S. and includes a mixture of boxing, wrestling, judo, karate, jui jitsu and other full contact competitions. Competitors are armed with a mouthpiece, a cup, shorts and four ounce fighting gloves to protect the hands. You can win by knockout, submission or referee stoppage. There are seven different weight classes: super lightweight (145 pounds and under), lightweight (146-155), welterweight (156-170), middleweight (171-185), light heavyweight (186-205), heavyweight (206-265) and super heavyweight (265 pounds plus).

Pine Ridge Rumblerz won all five of their matches Saturday at Ringwars 14 in Rapid City at the Rushmore Plaza Civic Center and included Harry "The Hit Man" Steele, Sam "Bruno" Bravo, Tyler "Smokey" Eagle Bull, Brandon "Kills em all" Kills Small and Dave "Bull Dawg" Michaud; Photo courtesy of Pine Ridge Rumblerz's.

Sam "Bruno" Bravo opened the evening for Pine Ridge at 225 pounds in the heavyweight division taking on Arlen Richards of Rapid City. Bravo used an arm bar to force Richards into submission at 1:37 mark of the first period. Tyler "Smokey" Eagle Bull made his fight debut in the welte weight division fighting Chris Tabor, a jui jitsu technician from Gillette. Eagle Bull used his wrestling and striking skills to punish Tabor throughout the match with the referee stopping the match at the 8:32 mark of the third period.

Harry "The Hitman" Steele was also making his first fight taking on Arlis Hamilton from Casper, Wyo. in the welter weight division. The referee stopped the fight with six seconds left in the first period as Steele was pummeling Hamilton at will. Brandon Kills Small fought professional fighter Tyson Burris from Team Miletich out of Iowa and after a flurry of 14 straight punches, the referee stopped the fight at the 1:54 mark of the first period giving all five Pine Ridge fighters victories on Saturday night.

A supportive crowd of 300 fans came from Pine Ridge to cheer for the Rumblerz and sponsors of the Pine Ridge team included Ampetu Luta Otipi, Prairie Wind Casino, Stadium Sports, Ghost Bear Construction, the Stonebergers and Pine Ridge School.

Red Cloud wins both varsity, JV Black Hills summer league tourneys

RAPID CITY - The Red Cloud Crusaders boy's basketball team completed their run in the Black Hills Summer high school basketball league at Rapid City Stevens high school by winning the tournament championship 82-40 over Rapid City Central Sunday evening.

Art Vitalis led the Crusaders with 17 second half points including three three pointers while Lester Gotheridge and Brier Iron Cloud helped with 13 each, Billy Scott added 12, Christian McGhee chipped in 11 and Dave Giago helped with 10.

Red Cloud opened the tourney against Hot Springs, getting a 71-46 win as Gotheridge hit for 24 points and 15 rebounds, Iron Cloud added 18 points, seven rebounds and five assists while Scott chipped in 12 points and seven boards, McGhee helped with 11 points, six assists and seven rebounds. Red Cloud knocked off Rapid City Stevens 59-44 in the semis behind McGhee's 14 points, five rebounds, five assists and four steals.

Red Cloud finished the league 8-1, moved their overall record to 32-3 for the summer and play in Bismarck this weekend, at S.D. Tech the following week-end and in Washington D.C. the last weekend of he month.

Red Cloud's JV also finished of league play by winning the tournament with wins over Rapid City Central JV and Rapid City Steven's JV. Tally Plume coached the JV team which included Jeremy Blacksmith, Kiley Weston, Truman Rossman, JD Plume, Mike Clifford, James Pine, Henry Crow, Daylon Black Bull, Ryan Lays Bad and Frankie Sioux Bob.

ROSEBUD COMPREHENSIVE HEALTHCARE FACILITY

WHAT ARE CONTRACT HEALTH SERVICES?

The hospitals and health clinics of the Indian Health Service (IHS), US Department of Health and Human Services are open to serve a population of more than one million Native Americans and Alaska Natives. However, IHS facilities cannot always provide a full range of healthcare. IHS providers write medical referrals when patients need medical care that is not available in an IHS facility. A referral is a request for medical service, not a guarantee of payment. A patient must meet general eligibility criteria, medical priorities, and use available alternate resources.

CHS program regulations are in the 42CFR (Federal Register) and must be adhered to. Under subpart C 26.23 (e): "When funds are insufficient to provide the volume of contract health services indicated as needed by the population residing in a contract health service delivery area, priorities for services shall be determined on relative medical need". At this time only emergency (threat to life, limb, or senses) services which are necessary to prevent the immediate death or serious impairment of the health of an individual are eligible for CHS payment.

If a patient has been seen by an IHS provider and provider has determined a medical need outside the scope of services provided by the IHS facility the referral process will begin. The CHS committee will establish priority of medical need and the referral will be approved or denied. If approved, CHS staff will assist in scheduling appointment and discuss possible transportation alternatives with patient. If alternate resources are available (Medicaid, Medicare, VA Healthcare, private insurance etc.) to the patient to pay for part or all of the care, IHS is the payor of last resort. If denied, a denial letter will be issued citing the reasons and instructing the patient or family of their appeal rights with the specific timeframe allowed for the appeal. The reasons for a denial are as follows: not eligible, residence outside CHS delivery area, 72 hour emergency notification not met, no prior approval for non-emergency care, not within medical priority, non-emergency care, alternate resources available, and service available at IHS facility.

8th Year of Severe Drought Conditions on Pine Ridge Reservation

Our department would like to remind the Oyate of the Pine Ridge Reservation that we are entering our 8th year of drought conditions. The weather has been kind lately, but we know it will heat up very quickly and every drop of water is precious.

Be Water-Wise Outdoors

- Try watering lawns in the early morning or late afternoon to prevent evaporation and scorching of the grass during mid-day sun.
- Try not to water on windy days
- Try using drip irrigation for your lawns. Saves 75% more water than s prinklers by limiting evaporation.
- Over-watering can cause fungus to form brown patches on lawns.
- Water lawns and shrubs once every five days to promote longer stronger roots.
- When mowing try keeping grass 3 inches long to help in moisture absorption.
- Keep swimming pools covered to stop debris and to help prevent evaporation.
- Try backwashing your swimming pool's filter weekly to help keep the water clean.
- Clean feet before entering pool.
- Make sure all livestock watering devices have an adequate float system that does not leak.
- Report all yard hydrant and thermo-line leaks to proper authorities.

Be Water-Wise Indoors

- Report all leaking bathroom and kitchen fixtures.
- When washing clothes use the right water setting for the load.
- Listen for toilet constantly running or filling when not in use (a leaky toilet can account for up to 1400 gallons of water lost per day, while the average household uses only 350 gallons per day.)
- A leaking toilet can cause your septic system to back up because of over saturation.
- Try using low flow toilets (1.5 to 2 gallons per flush), old toilets use up to 5 gallons per flush.
- Don't use your toilet as a garbage disposal.
- Turn off water while brushing teeth, shaving and washing dishes.
- Take fast showers instead of baths.
- Use low flow fixtures in baths and kitchens.
- An Ultra low flow showerhead uses 1.5 gallons per minute, while conventional showerheads can use up to 5 gallons per minute.

Police break up attempted beer blockade, arrest three

PINE RIDGE (AP) - Tribal police last Thursday shut down a volunteer blockade aimed at keeping beer out of the Pine Ridge area and arrested three organizers who refused to leave.

Only a few vehicles had been checked for alcohol by the time Oglala Sioux tribal police told the volunteers to stop because of safety concerns. After several minutes of arguing, police arrested Russell Means; Duane Martin Sr.; and Frank LaMere, a Winnebago activist.

Martin was arrested after it appeared he fought with officers over a staff he was carrying. He spoke in Lakota as more than a half-dozen officers wrestled him to the ground.

The three were arrested on charges of disorderly conduct and obstruction of justice, said tribal police Chief James Twiss.

``You can ask only so long before you have to arrest them and get them into custody,'' Twiss said.

``It looked like the violence was initiated by tribal police,'' said Mark Vasina of Nebraskans for Peace. His group and Martin's Strong Heart Civil Rights Movement staged the blockade.

About two dozen people were at Thursday's blockade, but only four or five actually were stopping vehicles. About half the people there were reporters.

As many as 20 tribal officers were called in to break up the blockade, while about a dozen Nebraska law officers stood by in Whiteclay.

Alcoholism is rampant on the reservation, which bans alcohol, and the volunteers had hoped the blockade would help curtail bootlegging. Four stores in Whiteclay, a village just outside the 16,500-member reservation, sell about 4 million cans of beer a year, mostly to American Indians.

Blockade workers, wearing bright green construction vests, had planned to stop vehicles, ask occupants whether they had any alcohol and confiscate it if they did. They attempted a similar blockade last year, but it was abandoned when police raised safety concerns, and both sides agreed to work together to address the problem.

Beer cans litter reservation roads and the streets of Whiteclay. People loiter outside the stores.

``I'm tired of my people dying. You've got 18-, 19-year-olds trading alcohol for sex,'' said Martin.

Martin had indicated organizers didn't need support from the tribal government, citing support of the Oglala Sioux's traditional leader, Chief Oliver Red Cloud. But organizers had wanted law enforcers to take over the blockade to ensure it remained nonviolent.

Twiss said that he empathizes with the group's mission but that he has to follow tribal law. He added that tribal police conduct at least 15 sobriety checkpoints on the reservation each year and plan to do one starting Friday through Wednesday _ including the road between Whiteclay and the reservation.

Earlier, acting tribal police Capt. Wilmer Youngman said the searches the volunteers planned went beyond the authority of police. ``We can't even search vehicles'' without having probable cause to believe a crime has been committed, he said.

Twiss said he told the organizers a year ago they needed to change tribal law and make the blockade legal but they didn't. ``They had a whole year to do something legislatively,'' Twiss said.

Counseling services available in Kyle, Mission and Martin

KYLE - Catholic Social Services has a counselor available in Mission on Monday, Tuesday and Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and in Kyle on Wednesday and Thursday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

If someone needs to set up an appointment they can call 1-800-727-2401 and arrangements can be made. There are also services available in Martin one day a week.

Every effort is made to provide services that is affordable and available to those in need. Catholic Social Services takes a look at each case and does not present fee barriers that may prevent people from receiving mental health services from their professional counselors.

If there is a mental health emergency there is a 24-hour Rural Helpline that is free 1-800-664-1349 and someone will be on the other line to assist during a crisis situation.

Clifford, Long Soldier and McCauley named Goldenwest scholarships

Clifford Long Soldier McCauley

WALL - Catlin Clifford of Red Cloud High School, Brice Long Soldier of Crazy Horse High, Theodore McCauley of Little Wound High School have been named recipients of a $1,000 Golden West Scholarship for the 2006-2007 school year.

Catlin is the son of Stanley Clifford Jr. and Julie Cuny and has participated in golf, basketball, rodeo, wrestling and guitar club. Catlin was also a varsity letter winner in golf, wrestling and rodeo.

Catlin's plans this fall include attending Chadron State College to major in Art.

Brice is the is the son of Lawrence Bettelyoun and Donella Long Soldier of Wanblee.

Brice was selected by the school based on a number of merit based qualities including leadership, academic achievement, civic and extracurricular activities as well as his motivation to serve and succeed.

Brice participated in student council, track and football. He was also recently selected to travel to Washington, DC to learn more about government, tour some of the Capitol's historical sites.

The Golden West scholarship is an annual award established to help promote educational opportunity for students within the Golden West service area. More than 300 scholarships have been awarded by the Wall, based telephone, Internet and cable television company since the Scholarship Program was established in 1999.

Lakota Funds receives $25,000 from Citi Foundation

KYLE - Lakota Funds on the Pine Ridge Reservation has received support of a $25,000 grant from Citi Foundation.

The money will help recruit, orient, assess, and provide guidance, training, technical assistance, and support for family asset building, individual development accounts, small business development, and lending to prospective and expanding entrepreneurs who are Oglala Sioux tribal members.

Included in the choices provided to meet selected needs of individual clients will be financial literacy, credit maintenance and repair, home buying, and business planning (including dimensions of success, market planning, cash flow planning, operations planning, management and capitalization).

Lakota Funds business success coaches currently have more than 80 clients working on business plans. This project will enable the coaches to include financial literacy, credit repair, and for up to 26 of them, IDA enrollment. In addition, over the next six months, 60 or more people will complete a business planning course produced with the local college. All of these people will be recruited to participate in financial literacy, family asset building, and credit building courses.

In addition, the business planning graduates will be eligible to have a success coach assigned to them to follow up on and deepen the feasibility, desirability, and viability of their business. For those needing micro loans, artist loans, small business loans, or technical assistance and/or bridge loans to assist in the development of larger businesses, we will help them prepare applications (including loan documents and applications).

The money received from Citi Foundation will supplement funding from the Bush and Kellogg Foundations for the Wawokiye Business Institute. This support allows Lakota Funds to provide free services to WBI clients.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

Hello and greetings! Have you been enjoying all this beautiful weather and rain as much as I have?

I hope so! I have written to you before at the beginning of the year in regards to my best friend whom I lost two and a half years ago. Thank you for everything you said! It helped me out a lot and though I can't say I have completely moved on with my life, I can say that I am doing a lot better now. I wanted to say thank you for your help.

Well now Anna I am writing you once again for some guidance. I have been trying to figure out who I am and what I'm meant to be doing with my life lately.

In this process I may have wakunzan "cursed" my family and someone I love with all my heart. I just received word that my dad may have cancer but we don't know for certain until he goes to the doctor. I'm not sure on the details all too much and I don't know how to talk to my dad about it.

I think about it and I remember what it was like when I lost my Gaga "Grandpa" to several years ago. I have talked with my mom and she has said that she's been stressed out because of my dad's health issues and this has created her to have anxiety attacks as well.

I am so stressed out and worried about my parent's health. I can't even begin to imagine my life as well as my kid's lives without my dad in it. I have depended on my dad so much throughout my life that I don't think I will be able to handle it if something were to happen to him.

I thought about going to a medicine man and talking about all this with him. I would do anything for my dad and it's hard hearing him talk about "not being around" or "when I leave."

Anna, I have confidence in you that you know what I am trying to say and what I'm asking you.

Am I putting my family at a bigger risk if I do go down the path I'm thinking of taking? Will everything work out for my parents or is this really meant to happen? I need answers and I need them now. I think I've made myself sick from worrying and at a high risk for diabetes but unsure of that as well. Everything has been a mess lately and I am trying to sort it all out. I need your help and insight please!

Stressed and Worried

Dear Stressed and Worried:

Unless you have done harm to others, through prayer, through thought, or through action, and made a bargain to take away from someone else, then there is nothing to fear about retribution against your family.

Life is round. Like Mother Earth, Like the Sun, the Moon, the Universe. We are born, we live and we die.

Each grave stone has a date of birth, and a dash, and a date of death. It is what we do with the dash that really counts.

Your father is intuitive. I have lived long enough to listen to people when they tell me they are going to leave. It doesn't mean immediately, but it means that God has given them some insight into when.

My sister told me for years that she would die when she was 53 years old and sure enough she left the Earth life then. The same thing happened with my husband.

Death is not a punishment. It is the natural order of events. A medicine man once told me that before the Europeans came to this continent that the Lakota people had no fear nor sadness associated with death.

They recognized it as a release into What Is Next.

They knew of the roundness of life, that the grandmothers and grandfathers would be coming back again.

To expect your life to end when the ones you love leave the Earth is not fair.

To burden them with a responsibility for your life and happiness creates a dark void of energy that sucks life energy.

We love our parents, they teach us everyday about life, about love, they protect us, they show us about how to live or not to live.

We must, in turn, show their Spirit, by living in a good way when they pass.

Paralyzing yourself in grief is more of a selfish expression than people realize. It holds the Spirit of the person here who is passing.

They cannot leave in peace if we are holding them with extreme despair. In effect, we are blaming them for our inability to function because they continued on their own true path.

That said, your father as far as I can see, is not passing into Spirit right away but he is preparing himself and his family for when that does happen.

He cannot live his life for you, and he does not want you to become static in grief and not live in his name. There is a time of grief and mourning, and it varies in time...but a year of recognition of their contribution to your life is what feels right to me.

That does not mean you wail around in grief and decide you cannot live. That is disrespectful to their memory. They do not want to be responsible for your pain so don't make them be responsible for it. Act like your father would act. Be strong, loving, kind, and compassionate.

The death of loved ones teaches us to honor and respect life as Spirits in human form.

It is not a curse to be in a family when people begin to pass. It is normal. Everyone does it, sooner or later.

Your life journey...and your identity are yours to find. I see you helping others; especially children. I see you walking with them and showing them and teaching them. It does not feel like a normal classroom.

I would consult a medicine man. They understand about the roundness of life. They are humble human men who also feel death in their lives. They know they cannot give us living and helping others because the ones they love choose to pass (I speak from a soul level).

They know that sometimes a person cannot be healed because it is their time to go Home. They can share this with you in a more culturally correct manner than I am able to do.

You are just finally maturing into a beautiful, cognizant, realized human being. Don't try to take on guilt for what you are not or have not or cannot do...or what you think you are responsible for doing that is not within your influence.

It is a useless emotion that burrows the Spirit in a cavern of immobility. It takes too long to heal from supposed inequities. Be responsible every day, in every way, for everything you say and do, and you will have no moment to reflect about what you cannot do.

Express your life as a reflection of the Creator in every moment, love every life form as though it were you, and have compassion - first for yourself (so you truly understand that you are not a mean spirited person), and then as for yourself for others.

You're great. Sometimes life is hard and sometimes it is easy. Sometimes it all in your perspective. Quit focusing on what is wrong with life and you will learn to enjoy and honor the Gift of Life (from the Creator) a lot more easily. Good Luck. I do love you and I do care.

Dear Anna,

I would love to have your help on a problem or two and even many. I am a person who worries about everything and I have a hard time sleeping at night, but I am in love with a Viet Nam veteran and was wondering if he really loves me as much as he says he does. But somewhere in this crazy mind I don't know where this is leading, do you think that I am on the right track in life.

I am a Pisces and my partner is a Gemini.

My daughter is a Virgo and is this relationship of ours affecting her in a bad way, I have been praying everyday now for almost a year and so far she has been doing alright, but I need some reassurance.

If we move in with my partner and his three boys will things be all right? (on the rez).

Really wondering out here love you Anna!
Pelamiya!

Dear Really Wondering:

These are questions that any aware mother would ask (concerning your daughter). I would give serious thought before I moved my daughter in with three boys.

I would want them to interact for a long period of time before I placed them within the same four walls.

Common sense can play out the possibilities.

I do see this man as a man who truly does love you. I see that he has some issues with impatience; but that he is true in his heart and wants a good life.

I see that it may be better to wait a while before deciding to live together. Time is the truest test of relationship integrity.

When everyone, including his boys, agrees that the families can merge in a good and peaceful way, then I might consider the move. Until then, remember his boys also have feelings and behaviors.

Children do not always act saintly.

They need adjustment time before someone moves in and tries to tell them what to do.

Good luck with this. Stay tuned to love in your heart and your life, and be aware of the quality of the interaction between you and this man - in everything, in every way, and every day. Blessings to you.

Could I have pre-diabetes?

Most people don't know if they have pre-diabetes. You could have prediabetes if:

- Someone in your family has diabetes.
- You weigh more than you should
- You had diabetes while you were pregnant (called gestational diabetes)
- You had a baby weighing over 9 lbs. at birth
- A doctor or nurse has said to you that you had a "touch of sugar" or "pre-diabetes"

Weekend fires burn 24,000 acres

Fireworks cause over 400 fires

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - "The western half of the reservation is so dry, the grass has no moisture and is just fuel waiting for someone to light it up," said Mike Twiss, BIA wildland fire operation specialist, "between the Stampede fire this weekend between Slim Buttes and Calico and the Kyle fire we have burned over 24,000 acres and that doesn't include the 400 plus fires started by fireworks since June 15."

The Stampede fire started near Slim Buttes Saturday night and as of Wednesday, it was 85 per cent contained and 75 per cent controlled having burned 23,000 acres. Volunteer fire departments from Martin, Batesland, Rushville, Vetal, Tuthill and Hay Springs helped with the fire fighting along with the two BIA strike teams made up of fire fighters from Winnebago, Yankton, Lower Brule, Crow Creek, Standing rock, Fort Beerthold and Spirit Lake and one Coyote Strike team from volunteer fire departments in eastern South Dakota and three engines out of White Earth, Red Lake and Nut Lake, Minnesota with between 75 and 100 firefighters out the first night. There were also two heavy bombers out of Rapid City, a helicopter and a single wing airplane.

"In my 22 years of working for fire control, the Stampede fire was one of the worst, three times I saw dust devils catch on fire becoming fire whirls," said Twiss, "you would have an area under control and the fire whirl would come down spreading the fire in every direction; with the help of a lot of folks we were able to save homes and buildings, we lost one house and one outbuilding and we escaped without any injuries or deaths. This fire terrified a lot of people, there were times we stopped fighting the fire to protect homes"

Normally, the Pine Ridge Agency has a crew of 10 on staff and add an extra eight for the summer fire season; with Pine Ridge being in a very high drought area, especially the western portion of the reservation and the use and abuse of fireworks additional strike teams and engine crews are added throughout the worst of the summer fire season, according to Twiss.

Articles in the local papers brought out many comments in the Rapid City Journal Rapid Reply section including: the firefighters did an excellent job protecting all of the structures in Calico, #4 and Slim Buttes, if it wasn't for the professionalism and dedication of these public workers many homes would have been destroyed…thank you firefighters!!!

Many homes and lives were saved because of your dedication, I'm thankful that the pilot was not seriously injured, I have much respect for firefighters, law enforcement and soldiers because you all sacrifice a lot to help the people.

Bordeaux, Scott announce for RST presidency

MISSION - Two Sicangu members have announced their candidacy for Rosebud Sioux Tribe president and five for vice president. President Rodney Bordeaux has announced his bid for re-election and Cyril 'Whitey' Scott has announced for his run for president. The closing date is July 31 at 5 p.m. Unofficially, Willie Kindle, Marion One Star-Young, Kelly Jones, Sr., Sherman Wright and Ned Metcalf have announced for vice president.

The following are the two announcements that have been submitted by Bordeaux and Scott.

Rodney Bordeaux

Rodney Bordeaux

Hau, Mitakuyepi. Two years ago I asked you, the members of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe, to support me in my campaign to be your President. At that time, I pledged to you that I would work hard to address the challenges that we all face here on the Rosebud Indian reservation.

Since that time, here is some of what we've accomplished.

*We enhanced the Rosebud Electronic Integration Corporation (REIC) research facility which will create nearly highly-skilled and high-paying jobs.

*We are in the process of finalizing our financing with the Shakopee Mdewakanton Sioux Community for our very own tribally-owned grocery store, which will bring 74 jobs.

*We started an air ambulance initiative through a partnership with PASS NET, from Minneapolis, MN.

*We also were able to secure State Medicaid funding for our Alcohol & Drug Treatment Program that was previously unavailable.

*We tentatively secured $800,000 for a new Methamphetamine (Meth) Treatment wing to be built into the existing RST Alcohol & Drug Treatment Program building.

*We tentatively secured $200,000 for new ambulances and equipment for the RST Ambulance Program.

*We secured more education funding for the Head Start bureau and assisted in the restoration of the Johnson O'Malley program.

*We secured continuation of funding from the US Justice Department for the Boys and Girls Club to keep our children involved in productive activities.

*We have also created a Suicide Prevention Task Force made up of local community leaders and tribal program personnel to end this crisis.

*We continue our efforts to uphold our treaty rights with the U. S. Government.

*We started work with our

Lakota race car driver leads first in street stock at Black Hills speedway

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett
Times Editor

KYLE - Louis Vocu, 27, has been racing at the Black Hills Speedway for the last three years and has earned enough points for a first place standing in the "Street Stock" division and is working towards a season championship. He has now won four of nine races and leading the points by 11 over the second.

The young Lakota race car driver has built up quite a following comprised of family, friends and other fans who attend the Friday night races which run from April to September. Vocu's car is a 1985 Monte Carlo with a 358 cubic inch engine. Marty Brave and a lot of other friends helped him to get it ready, while the paint job was underwritten by a sponsor Recommended of Gordon, Neb. His pit crew is made up of Marty Brave, Warren Pourier, Jr., Eddie Jumping Eagle, and Friday Garnette.

Vocu's stock car also sports an old Oglala Sioux tribal license plate in the back, which belonged to his grandpa Wilbur Witt. The plate was on the wall of the garage for years and now has a special pace on Vocu's car. He said the plate represents his Lakota pride on the track.

His sponsors include Braves Auto, Chad and Crystal Brunch of Lakota Plains Propane, Leonard and Carol Ferguson of the Food Stop, Martin Auto Parts and Kathy Stover and Rusty Puckett of Lakota Prairie Ranch Resort. Vocu said that he always had a interest in racing from the time he as well, burned about 300-400 acres and brought out volunteer fire crews from Martin, Green Valley, Kyle, and Batesland. One of the slurry bombers crashed during the fire; the pilot walked away with scratches and bruises. The Kyle fire, the Stampede fire and the plane crash are all under investigation by a team from the Bureau. Although fireworks have been the cause of more than 400 fires on the reservation this summer, they are not ready to determine the cause of the two major weekend fires.

"On the night of the Stampede fire, we just about drained Pine Ridge, Slim Buttes and Oglala water systems, we had to start using Whiteclay Dam," said Twiss; "last year we fought a fire in Porcupine and just about drained their system and put the dialysis unit in danger so now we work closely with Oglala Sioux Rural Water Supply System and when a system gets low we use a dam or a creek."

Arson and a lack of enforcement of the laws on the books continue to present a challenge to fire crews on the reservation.

"We are in a severe drought area of the U.S., our rating is up to extreme rated over 600 on the fire index," said Twiss, "people need to be very careful with debris or trash fires and to supervise their children letting off fireworks, overall we need to be a lot more careful."

High School activities association changes post game rules

Lunderman, LeBeau to be honored

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PIERRE - During the June board meeting of the South Dakota High School Activities Association meeting in Pierre, the board voted 8-0 to change the policy on post game celebrations - Team personnel only, shall be allowed on the floor following any district, regional or state championship game in the sports of volleyball, girl's basketball and boy's basketball. Following presentation of individual and team awards spectators will be allowed on the floor.

"Some people wonder if this change was made because of the events following the State A championship game this year," said Wayne Carney, executive director of the activities association, "but it is more of a safety issue and a sportsmanship issue, the change was long over due, it allows participants and coaches to shake hands at the end of the contest, ensures the safety of the participants, avoids confrontations between exuberant fans and downhearted players and fans of the school which was defeated, allows awards to be presented within a reasonable time and protects the playing surface."

Football quarterfinal, semifinal and championship games were covered in a separate resolution, also voted in 8-0. Failure to keep fans and spectators off the court or field will result in not receiving the awards or recognition at the tournament site.

"The administration and staff of the winning team will be responsible for keeping their fans off the court or field," said Carney, "we need to educate our families, friends, fans and spectators about the new rules throughout the year so they will be prepared."

The activities board also approved the sanctioning of an out of season basketball tournament. The Sioux Falls Slam N Jam Basketball tournament has been sanctioned to accommodate NCAA Division I men's basketball coaches who have a window of opportunity to attend events during the month of April providing the state has a sanctioned event.

The board also approved the list of individuals who will be honored by the activities association during the upcoming school year. The list approved includes under coaches and directors Richard "Tuffy" Lunderman in basketball from Little Wound and Dusty LeBeau in basketball from Pine Ridge.

Congressional delegation to ensure that our veterans get the services that they deserve.

*Recently, the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) released a proposal so tribes could get access to excess mobile homes that FEMA no longer needs. I will continue to do all that I can to bring realistic opportunities to house more of our people.

*We've begun to explore the possibility of a new, or expanded casino that would provide more jobs and more funding to help meet the many critical needs of the people here at Rosebud.

*We have created an Office of Aging to advocate for our elders.

*We have created the Lakota Language Preservation Program.

I have restored integrity to the Office of the President two years ago. I stated that I would listen carefully to what our tribal program directors, tribal employees and tribal members have to say about solving the many problems that face our tribe on a daily basis. I have and continue to do just that. We cannot solve our problems alone. We must continue to work together.

Cyril 'Whitey' Scott

RST council representative, Cyril "Whitey" Scott of Antelope community, has announced his intention to run for the office of President of the Rosebud Sioux tribe.

Scott appears to place a large emphasis on economic development and the changes that self-sufficiency will bring to the people of the Rosebud. He would like to see RST stop its reliance on the equity that is occasionally built up when the Rosebud Casino profits are on the rise. He said, "You have to bring change here. There is no way around it. You hear that people do not want to work, but there is no place to work."

The Rosebud Casino would be the focus of more creative development if it was up to Scott. He would like to see such initiatives as a water park, a place for fine dining, or perhaps a movie theatre. He is convinced that RST needs to "turnover" or recycle the dollars that are spent here and keep them here. He also said, "Instead of spending half a million dollars for clothing orders, we could invite a clothing store to set up here and it would create jobs and increase tax revenue."

Scott also sees a need for a conference center so that patrons will not have to travel to other locations for their conference needs, while a propane company based on the Rosebud would help to keep the money here and perhaps further invested. He said, "We need a viable plan so that we can profit from our own land. Such things as farming, hunting and grazing should be taken advantage of."

Grocery stores in several communities would be a way to create self-sufficiency in some while also attracting farmers and ranchers who need gas and who might choose to purchase their gas locally instead of driving long distances.

On the issue of Lakota language and culture, Scott admitted that he has a great admiration for those who can speak the language and promised to take a Lakota language course at Sinte Gleska University, if elected and if time permits. He said, "When it comes to culture, we need to orient the kids more and get them out of the city mentality of gangs. Culture is designed to sustain one's family."

Finally, Scott is credited with acting as a "go-between" when the CITGO Corporation donated funds to the RST low income energy assistance program last winter in the amount of $695,000. He also made the initial contact which led to a $10,000 donation to the Boys and Girls Clubs of Rosebud a couple of weeks ago from a California tribe.

Car racing

was able to ride a bike and enjoyed racing it. His sponsors also pick up the cost of the entry fee and it is always beneficial if one can pickup more sponsors along the way.

Vocu has little fear of racing and with his confidence the 15-20 minute adrenalin rush that accompanies his event makes it all worthwhile and nothing else matters during that time.

Vocu said, "It takes both skill and the right set up of the car. You have to work on the car all the time." It also takes constant tuning and the purchase of different parts as needed from time to time said Vocu.

Moving upward to a more challenging class of racing is something that Vocu desires, however, he noted that it takes a lot of money. He said, "I would like to move up but it is costly. You roll against guys who have money and who have a good racing car."

He hopes to pick up more sponsors to help with the cost of racing his stock car. The racing fuel is $7 a gallon added with the cost of the upkeep and the weekly travel.

Kids love the idea of knowing this race car driver and getting to see his street stock car. Vocu enjoys interacting with kids and has printed autograph cards with a photo of his car and the name Warhoop Racing splashed across the top. His parents are Wilma Witt and Ed Vocu. His grandpa Witt helps him at times with work on his car.

Vocu is employed with Golden West Telecommunications and is a 1998 graduate of Little Wound High School.

Finally, Vocu noted that it takes a lot of courage to race and that his family and friends are behind him and that it provides motivation for him to continue to do even better. His goal is to move up to a more modified class.

He is seeking more sponsors and can be reached at 605-454-5577.

Pine Ridge Divas, Lakota Regulators open NABI with two wins

PHOENIX - The Lakota Regulators opened their 2007 Native American Basketball Classic with a 90-70 win over the Yakama Nation. The Regulators, most of Little Wound's team from this season that took second in state, came from behind in their second game with a 69-58 win over the defending champs the SBT Shockwave. Down by 12 in the first half, rich Big Boy, TJ McCauley and Brice Hornbeck started clicking in the second half and earned their second win. They play Fort Mohave Wednesday before the teams are seeded into a single elimination bracket that starts on Thursday.

The South Dakota Hoop Divas beat Gila River 78-29 on Monday and play the Gym Rats of Lame Deer, Mont. on Wednesday night to finish pool play. The Divas took second last year.

The South Dakota Lady Sioux lost to the Lady Magic 50-35 and the South Dakota Jewels from Cheyenne River lost to Northern New Mexico 55-27, lost to 4 the Love of the Game 84-37 and beat Eastern Native Sista Hoopz 43-40.

Single elimination bracket play begins Thursday with the finals for the boys and the girls set for Saturday in the U.S. Airways Arena, home of the Phoenix Suns.

LAKOTA LANGUAGE SURVEY RESULTS

Oceti Wakan, a small non-profit, in Calico Community on the Pine Ridge Reservation has been doing a systematic house to house survey in each of the nine Districts on Pine Ridge Reservation to see the health of the Lakota language on our reservation. This has been funded by an ANA (Administration for Native Americans) grant. Oceti Wakan's mission is for the preservation of Lakota language and culture. We have developed books and CDs on both. We have reported Eagle Nest District, La Creek District, Medicine Root District, Pass Creek District, Pine Ridge District, Porcupine District, Wakpamni District, and White Clay District. With today's report of Wounded Knee District, this represents close to 9,000 tribal members that we have surveyed reservation wide. The final report of the entire Pine Ridge Reservation is below.

We are in serious jeopardy of losing the Lakota language. We hope the results that we have published will help us break the denial of just how serious this is. We need to put our efforts together in unity to save our Lakota language and culture for the ones yet unborn. You lose a language; you lose a culture as language is what formulates how you view your world.

State annual accident report released

Shannon County is the deadliest county for accidents

PIERRE (AP) - It's 5 p.m. on a Sunday in August - the time, day and month you are most likely to die on the road in South Dakota.

That was the deadliest period for state motorists last year, according to an annual traffic report produced by the state Accident Records Office.

Alcohol, as always, played a major role in many fatal crashes. Nearly one-third of drivers in those deadly accidents last year were intoxicated or had been drinking.

The deadliest county? Shannon. Eleven people died in crashes involving alcohol in lightly populated Shannon County alone, where alcohol is illegal on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation. That is 15 percent of all fatalities involving alcohol recorded in the state's 66 counties.

Minnehaha, the state's most-populated county, had four alcohol-related fatalities last year.

Gov. Mike Rounds, in a cover letter included with the report, notes that one-fifth of those who died in alcohol-related crashes on state roads were younger than 21, the legal age to drink.

"We must not drive if we have been drinking, and we must pass the safety message on to our young drivers," Rounds wrote.

There were 191 deaths on state roads last year, an increase of 3 percent from 2005. The number of fatal crashes - at 172 - increased 8 percent and was the highest in three years.

Roy Meyer, state highway safety director, said a high point in the report is a 3 percent reduction in the total number of traffic accidents last year, or a decline of more than 500.

"Despite the addition of nearly 5,500 licensed drivers to South Dakota roads in 2006, we're still making headway in our goal to reduce the number of vehicle crashes," he said. "However, there is still work to be done, especially in the areas of drunk driving and seat-belt use."

More than 11,000 motorists were arrested for drunken driving last year in South Dakota. That was an increase of 11 percent from 2005 and was the highest number of such arrests in at least 15 years.

Crash statistics by the numbers

Facts from the 2006 South Dakota Motor Vehicle Traffic Crash Summary:

* 15,730 traffic crashes for the year (All crashes resulting in injuries or deaths or at least $1,000 in property damage must be reported to police.)

* 6,015 injuries

* 191 deaths, including 7 pedestrians, 22 motorcyclists and one bicyclist (Only deaths that occur within 30 days of accidents are counted.)

* $84 million in property damage

* 11,282 drunken driving arrests; 6,801 convictions

* 39 percent of fatal crashes involved alcohol; 38 percent of fatalities involved alcohol; 29 percent of drivers in fatal crashes were drinking

* Nearly half of those killed in alcohol-related crashes were 21-39 years old

* The peak three-hour period daily for fatal crashes was 3 p.m. to 6 p.m.

* 53 percent of those killed in cars, vans, pickups and SUVs were either partially or totally ejected

* Teenage drivers accounted for 8 percent of all drivers but had 18.5 percent of all serious crashes

* Most holiday crashes occurred during the Thanksgiving weekend, followed by July Fourth

* 582,517 South Dakotans were licensed to drive

* 59 percent of all accidents involved male drivers, although the number of licensed drivers was equally split between males and females

* The state had 972,000 registered motor vehicles.

Pine Ridge Village private sector growing one business at a time

PINE RIDGE - Lloydell " Susie" Mesteth wanted to increase the services available in her Mi Case Mexican Restaurant in Pine Ridge Village. Susie wanted to renovate and upgrade her building and equipment. She knew that Lakota Funds had micro lending program for small businesses to access up to $5,000 on a fast track if they had good credit and a viable business.

She got together with David White Bull, a small business coach in the Wawokiye Business Institute at Lakota Funds, and soon had a completed application for presentation to the Loan Department. Tony Taylor, Loan Officer, wrote a favorable Credit Memorandum and forwarded it to the Loan Portfolio Manager, Eileen "Taffy" Lafferty. Taffy approved the request, gave it to the Executive Director, Dowell Caselli-Smith for approval and a check was cut.

Susie has had a lifetime dream of owning her own restaurant and providing high quality non-franchise meals to her family, friends, and neighbors.

Mi Casa serves great Mexican food at reasonable prices in a warm and inviting atmosphere. David White Bull says, "She opened up in May of this year putting every dime she had into her dream of running her own restaurant. When I drove through Pine Ridge I saw the new business and stopped in to see how things were going for her and if she needed any help. Ever since then we have helped her with the technical and financial assistance.

Her business has great potential to become a successful restaurant.

Her food is delicious and service is great--she also employees three workers."

Susie applied for a loan under the micro lending category that only requires a cash flow projection, credit score, some collateral, along with business and personal financial records and her personal guarantee to be reviewed by the loan staff and the Executive Director. With her Individual Development Account funds and her personal integrity and commitment, it was a slam dunk.

To find her restaurant just look across the street from the Pine Ridge Oil/Sinclair station.

Lakota language immersion class concludes at St. Joseph's

By Archie B. Beauvais
Special to the Times

CHAMBERLAIN - Francis Whitebird is a Harvard-educated Vietnam Veteran who has the survival of the Lakota language foremost in his mind.

He said, "Lakota is going to be saved in the home and not the school." He coordinated a Lakota language immersion class at the St. Joseph's Indian School last week and though the class was not filled to capacity, he said that among the eleven enrolled students there was great diversity and an interesting range of those who were familiar with the Lakota language.

Whitebird has retired after many years in the higher education field and government service and is now content to work very hard at saving the Lakota language. He said, "Language has cultural values with it and we still have that. Lakota language is changing very quickly and if we do not stop it, it will change for good." As an example, Whitebird cited a couple of Lakota words, "wopila" and "doksa" which should not stand alone, but are used as such. Generally, they are combined with an adverb or verb to make a longer word set that has meaning.

Three other co-instructors for the immersion class, also from Rosebud, collaborated with Whitebird in preparing for the class two months earlier.

Sandra Black Bear, Philomene White Lance and Ben Black Bear are all highly regarded as Lakota language teachers and continue to share a vision of restoring the language and ensuring its survival.

Ben Black Bear noted that the experience was successful and that in their planning they used the University of Colorado language material. He said, "It is gradual and progressive material which builds upon itself. We studied the basic sound system, writing system, the basic structure of language and translation exercises. We also did substitution drills and basic grammatical structure. The material takes Lakota and analyzes the grammatical structure on its own merit…we accomplished what we planned to do, so we were successful."

The course was approved by the University of South Dakota for those who desired college credit and the syllabus served as a guide for the class.

The participants included a high school student, a nurse from Pine Ridge who is an ethnic German and a couple of Lakota language instructors from the Eagle Butte area.

Ben Black Bear has studied the orthography and a method of teaching Lakota since the 1970s as created by the University of Colorado. He was able to explain the linguistics behind the approach to his three colleagues and it formed the basis of their teaching in the immersion class which focused on teaching sentences rather than individual words.

Whitebird said that everyone in Lakota country needs to take a course in linguistics whether or not they have a understanding of Lakota as it provides a look at the form and theory behind word usage.

A related issue in using Lakota is that when someone makes a mistake in speaking Lakota, others may admonish the speaker. That does not occur when someone speaks incorrect English and Whitebird says that it should be applied both ways.

Having been funded by the Office of the Governor, a prepared report will be submitted to the Office of Indian Education detailing the immersion classes, while instructor evaluations have been submitted to the university.

The next step is to have a summer immersion class and bring teachers together with the express purpose of saving the language. Teachers can talk about successes and failures in teaching the Lakota language.

Royal River Casino investigates fireworks accident

FLANDREAU (AP) - A preliminary investigation into fireworks injuries Wednesday at a tribal casino near Flandreau indicates that a fireworks cylinder tipped over and then shot into the crowd.

Royal River Casino manager Tom Allen said it appears that a fireworks container exploded on the ground and knocked over two other cylinders - one of which shot into the crowd.

Authorities have refused repeated requests for more details, such as how many people were injured and how serious the injuries were.

Allen has said there were injuries and vehicle damage. Initial reports indicated one or two people were hurt.

The 17th annual fireworks show was being put on at the casino by Premier Pyrotechnics.

In a letter to the company, Allen said Premier Pyrotechnics was under contract to provide the fireworks. He asked Premier to do its own investigation into the accident and that the casino will forward its reports on the incident to the company.

"During our 17 years of operation, this is our first adverse incident," Allen wrote.

St. Francis Indian School injunction against RST is continued

ROSEBUD - When the Rosebud Sioux tribal council passed a resolution to suspend the charter of St. Francis Indian School recently, it installed a review board of local Sicangu whose primary task is to work with the SFIS board of education in arranging for a new election.

The new board would be expanded to seven members and would be open to all Rosebud Sioux tribal members only. The election is to be held at the same time as the RST primary election; however, the school filed an injunction in RST tribal court to halt the process.

RST vice-president, Wayne Boyd, in his report to the RST council that was carried live on KINI FM on July 11 said, "This has the potential to be a big thing if the court grants the injunction. They are bringing in some 'big guns.'" Both RST president Rodney M. Bordeaux and RST council representative, Mike Boltz of St. Francis said that the issue needed to be addressed in executive session at this point. Boltz said, "We need to go into executive session as there are potentially serious implications here."

The RST regular session was then taken off-air as the council voted to go into executive session. As the legal issue continues it is likely that the public will continue to be informed as to the school board election timeline.

KINI FM radio shortly thereafter, announced that Fr. John Hatcher would be addressing the RST council on Thursday, July 12 on his plans for 'evangelization' of the Rosebud reservation.

The public was invited also to show their support of Fr. Hatcher if they wished by being there.

Guest Column

Looking ahead

Dr. Jim Wilson
Guest Column

By Dr. Jim Wilson

It was a magnificent and memorable day and my mind was focused like a powerful telescope. The large gathering of the 2007 Pine Ridge High School graduation ceremonies at the school's beautiful stadium was also focused on sending nearly 100 graduates out into the world.

Every May the Oglala Sioux Tribe sends several hundred tribal members from Pine Ridge, Red Cloud, Little Wound, Crazy Horse and Martin High Schools out into the world with high school diplomas. At each ceremony the rituals are similar. While there is some talk of the future, much praise is for the accomplishments of those golden high school years.

Graduates go forth eagerly anticipating a future free from the daily grind of getting up, going to school, doing classroom work, turning in homework and generally maintaining a positive participation as a member of the student body. I sensed a series of collective sighs that an end had been reached. The grads sighed. The parents sighed. And the officials sighed.

For the past month I have been thinking about what we are doing through this process called education and searching for patterns to our collective and individual behaviors. For the would-be Social Scientist the first step in assessing any situation is defining the current situation and then comparing it to "the norm." We are never short of information on ourselves as we are living laboratory specimens providing for endless studies. As a matter of fact we are overwhelmed with information (data). It is not a matter of gathering, but of sorting what we have.

Some basic information: Average Oglala Sioux Tribe household size: 4.18 vs. 2.5 for South Dakota, average age of 26.8 vs. 35.4 for the state, 31.3 percent of the OST population could be classified as having a health disability compared to 30.0 percent for the United States, but when alcoholism is added the OST disability figure dramatically rises to 56.7 percent. OST unemployment of: 65-70 percent vs. 3-4 percent for South Dakota, 5-6 percent of OST members will earn BS degrees vs. 26 percent for the state. From 200 freshmen, 100 have survived and maybe some day 10-12 will finish college.

These figures give us a pretty bleak picture and highlight that our recent graduates might also be called "survivors." Of those near-100 survivors, all are deemed college-ready and almost none are work-ready.

The Number One reason for this situation is complicated but can be explained. A fairly well-fixed relationship which people like and want to keep is called a paradigm.

There is a serious disconnect between the three parties to our education paradigm; the students, the parents and the educators. The principal disconnect is between the parents and the educators. The main reason for this disconnect is that the educators have been singing the wrong song! They are singing We Are A Tough Bunch and You Have To Beat Us To Graduate. They sing that song because it is the only song the policy making-money controlling politicians know. The kids are resisting and rebelling and the parents are supporting their kids because no parent wants their kids to suffer.

Students and parents tend to see only futility in fully committing to full participation in school. However, unemployment figures tell us the law of unintended consequences is at work: dropping from school to avoid a short-time school pain leads to a lifetime of economic pain.

Clearly, we need to make a paradigm shift. We need to teach our kids, parents and educators a new song. I suggest the title be: Let Us All work Together To Make Each Person Productive According to Individual Abilities and Needs. We have talked about Individual Education Plans for years, but I don't see them being utilized where the three parties develop them, evaluate them and modify them as needed to help the students move ahead with eagerness and positive anticipation of success. The theory of IEDs is to help every individual find an appropriate place in our society. A successful IED will help the high school grad make a seamless progression from student to productive adult.

Parents and educators need to demand and develop an overlap of academic and vocational options beginning at the start of the high school junior year. The college-bound students will start taking college foundation courses and the vocation-bound students begin to develop small business management knowledge and trade skills by which they will can/will make a living (anywhere).

The Second Reason for this situation is that our leaders (elected and appointed) have been failing to work at selling the advantages (and needs) of individuals being positive contributors to the welfare of the family, community, state and nation. Everybody in the community must understand that getting educated and/or trained is economic development at the individual level and is an individual's responsibility. Preparing for self-support is honoring self, family and tribe.

Our Third Reason is that we have no coherent community roadmap for economic development. Forget manufacturing, assembly and internet technology; take housing, for instance.

At the moment everybody is pushing, shoving and shouting about housing. Ellsworth housing, Katrina trailers, Partnership For Housing homes, VA and Bank financing, and dozens of burned-out and boarded-up houses but no OST Housing Authority Executive Director!

Where are the training programs for carpenters, plumbers, masons, electricians or for ongoing maintenance, repair, remodeling? Where are the small businessmen who will operate their own businesses to provide home-owner services?

Where are the Lakota Fund and the Hub Zone folks? Why is there no Real Estate market on the Rez through which individual tribal members can buy, sell or trade real property? Where is my tribal government?

That's it for now as I have to run; too much on my agenda for the near future. I saw in the July 7 Rapid City Journal that there is a new list of The Seven Wonders of The World. I will be visiting three of them: the OST Casino this month, the OST Pow-Wow in August and the Yellowstone River (the longest undammed river in the US) in September. Docjims@ail.com.

Our communities need a fireworks ordinance and to be enforced

Dear Editor:

The weekend is over and I'm in such gratitude to the Great Mystery that my relatives and we did not lose our homes this weekend. It felt so close.

We are told that some people on the reservation lost their homes but we have not been able to get the news on that reality. We heard it was much worse in Kyle. I don't know. I know for us in Calico Community, Slim Buttes, #4, to Oglala it was pretty scary Saturday night and some of Sunday. Saturday afternoon we saw a big, billowing smoke fire from the direction of Slim Butts. It looked like a trailer had caught fire but by 9 p.m. that evening, they had closed Hwy. 18 from Red Cloud Schools to Lakeside in Oglala.

All you could see was 180 degrees ring of fire. As we were driving the back roads to check on our house, we ran into friends and relatives that had been asked to leave their homes.

Needless to say, we started praying for the wind to turn as we were told that it had jumped Hwy. 18 in the #4 area going to a high population area. We were blessed that the wind did turn west towards Chadron and they were able to put that fire out.

We would turn on KILI hoping to hear some information and guidance, as we needed help on what to do. It was madening to only hear life going on as usual as we and so many were in such crisis. To be fair we didn't listen to it all the time so they may have been giving us some direction and help but we didn't hear any. Thank goodness my grandson had a police/fire scanner so we could at least get some information. By 3:00 am my niece across the road was told they needed to evacuate; which she didn't as she was watering the back lawn trying to save her home. Thank goodness the fire didn't get that far. The police went to house to house to make sure the people were safe. They were wonderful.

I'm writing this for two reasons. One, when our community is in crisis it would help so much we had a system in place for public safety to communicate with KILI to communicate with us to save lives and property.

The police and our firemen were my heroes that night. Much gratitude and prayers go out to them! Thank you so much for all your hard work! You saved so many homes that night and lives.

The other reason I am writing this article is that we need to put an ordinance into affect that when the earth is so dry, fireworks should not be able to be sold.

This should be decided by the fire department.

This is being responsible adults. So much destruction was done this year due just to this one factor.

Everyone loves fireworks but sometimes when the conditions aren't safe, they only should be able to be done by professionals not every other child on the reservation. Please let this be a wake up call to make a law to this affect.

I thank you for your time and anything you can do to help with these two problems.

Election codes needs to cover more

Hau Editor,

With the elections upon us once again, I have to say that I am disappointed with the lack of leadership. I think tribal council last week is being blamed in other local papers. Although tribal council is partly at fault for doing nothing but give themselves raises, per diem, local mileage, etc., the direction the tribe takes is up to the president. With the due process violations by the past election board members and the many, many problems associated with our election process, it's typical that no positive changes have been made, let alone address the issues. I filed my complaint against those election board members for violating my due process rights (like we really have rights) and requested that the governmental affairs committee hold a meeting or allow tribal council to address our concerns. I submitted a proposed amendment concerning "Nepotism/Conflict of Interest" clause that other tribal governments had approved because of the problems or perception of problems associated with having multiple family members sitting in positions of power. I believe that our election code needs to cover the election of boards, committees and commissions as other prosperous tribes have figured out. As you can see with this administration, putting the same faces back in charge through boards, committees and commission does not work to benefit the people, but it sure benefits each other. In closing, I wanted to thank those shareholders and tribal members that attended the Tribal Land Enterprise shareholders meeting to oppose the illegal Zibell land purchase.

A thank you for the elder's wacipi

Dear Editor:

The staff of the Oglala Sioux Tribe's Health Education Program offers thanks and gratitude to the elders of the Pine Ridge Reservation and the following people for supporting the 4th Annual Elders' Health Fair and Pow-Wow, which was held in the Number Four Community of the Wakpamni District on July 22.

Fern Apple, Director of Meals for the Elderly and her hardworking staff; Arlene Iron Cloud and Elaine Yellow Horse; Kendra Lone Elk, Tammy Starr, and the I.H.S. Public Health Nurses; Sylvia Tobacco; Stevie Slow Bear; Dr. Mark Butterbrodt; Robert Running Bear, Director of Energy; Marilyn and the CHR Program; Bobette Tobacco and Sawee Frank, I.H.S. Diabetes Prevention; Lisa Dillon and Health Administration; Henry Brown and LTLI; Cheryl Whistler and the Treasurer's Office; Jerrod Gallego, Summer Youth;

The drum groups Hehaka, Road House, Crazy Horse, White River Crossing; NDN Express.

And the dancers, especially the families of Saige Pourier, Wahpe To Win, Tasina Hocoka Win; Wade Broken Rope, Clinton Apple, and the many others who participated; family of Diane Kelly.

We were honored to be in the presence of the elders who participated in this year's dedication of the shade in memory of Nellie Two Bulls who shared her voice with us each of the previous years.

Thank you,

A Lakota Perspective

Understanding copyright laws

By Lydia Whirlwind Soldier

Many years ago, actually about 40 years ago while living in Maryland I came across and bought two small silkscreen reproductions by a Zuni artist at a Flea Market. I kept the reproductions when I moved to California and then I brought them home to Rosebud. I hadn't taken very good care of them and even thought of tossing them out; instead I put them in my storage shed.

One day as I was cleaning my shed and getting rid of things I would never use again I came across the reproductions. I looked on the back and found a bio on the artist, which I looked up on the Internet. The artist is now deceased but has many very valuable paintings exhibited in art galleries across the southwest. Each numbered reproduction from his original painting sells for no less than $350. This price is at the low end of the small silkscreen reproductions that I have. His paintings now sell for thousands. I found that wasicu owns the copyright to this artist's paintings and prints made from the paintings. Granted I don't know how copyrights to this artist's work were obtained but I do know that we as Native people are uninformed when it comes to copyright laws.

Upon finding this information on the Zuni artist I was motivated to research copyright laws.

I found that copyrights for creative works do not have to be declared, as they are automatically in force at creation. However, it is suggested that the symbol for copyright is used. That symbol is a C within a circle or (C) with a date and the name of the artist or may be simply written "Copyright [dates] by [author/owner]. I hesitated to apply for copyright on my own writings because I was not familiar with copyright laws. I thought it was a long drawn out process and I didn't want to be bothered.

A copyright is generally subject to a statutorily determined period. Once that period expires the copyrighted works become public domain. When copyrighted works become public domain they may be freely used or exploited by anyone who applies for copyright. Books and other works published before 1923 have expired copyrights and are in public domain. Copyrighted works published before 1964 must be renewed 28 years after the first publication or it will become public domain. (Wikipedia) This is only a simple overview of the very extensive copyright laws.

It is common practice for people who I call 'parasites' to apply for expired copyrights. Once the 'parasites' obtain copyright on work done by others, it belongs to them to do with as they please. In this capitalistic society 'parasites' assume copyrights to writings and other creative works that will be marketable moneymakers for them in the future and it is viewed as completely legal.

How many Natives have lost copyrights, earnings and property to the parasites? Can tribal sovereignty protect us from those anxiously waiting and wanting to take our copyrights? That would be an interesting research project for someone working on a doctorial thesis. Such a study would expose the parasites who have not worked for the wealth coming from the theft of works done by others.

Needless to say, I appreciate the small reproductions that I owned. I had them professionally framed and gave them as a gift. My experience with the Zuni paintings made me more aware and only skims the surface of many thefts committed against Native people. It appears our emotions and even our thoughts that we use in the creative process are up for grabs for anyone wishing to take advantage of the copyright laws if we are not ever vigilant.

How do we better ourselves and get rid of those statistics

Dana Badmilk

I recently came across an article on the internet written by Stephanie M. Schwartz a freelance write. The article was posted on the nativevillage.org website. It was called The Arrogance of Innocence.

This article describes in detail the conditions of the Pine Ridge Reservation. Some of the things I knew, I mean all you have to do is look around you and you know. Some of the facts and figures I did not know and was shocked to see them.

The author the article pleads that "it is not a plea for charity."

But to anyone reading it, I think that is exactly what you get - charity. The numbers in the report are eye-opening to many people who live in high mortgaged houses with central air, people who mow their lawns on Saturday, and have huge family dinners on Sunday.

These are statistics many of us here on the resevration live with day in and day out. If we read through the statistics, we all probably know at least one person in every aspect of the report.

We all know someone with diabetes, or someone who lives in substandard housing, or someone who dropped out of school, etc. The list goes on and on.

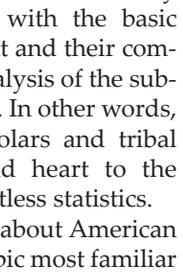
I know people come here during the summer to "help." That is all good and everything that they can always remember the year they came to "help the Indians." But it makes me wonder how much it really helps to have handouts and stuff done for you. Does it really help when the help is almost expected?

What if we stood up and said "We can't live like this anymore. We can't have diabetes and alcoholism destroying us. We won't live in substandard housing. We won't take this unemployment rate."

How do we demand a better life and get it?

My dad once told me "They confined us to a reservation and treat us bad. No other country treats their own people so bad. They do this to us to keep us poor and make us beg. To forget we were once so proud, but that pride in us never goes away. No matter how bad things might be, Lakota's always have their pride."

Which takes me back to the question I keep asking myself "How do we demand a better life for the people." (Without sounding like a politician.)



All I did was write about it. My uncle once told me, "Writing about something and doing it are two different things."

I know this. So I want to know, "How do we better ourselves and get rid of these dang statistics?" If you read from the lakotacountrytimes.com website, I would appreciate some feedback.

Dana Badmilk is a 35 year old self employed artist who recently moved back to the Pine Ridge Reservation. She lives there with her husband and four children. She can be read at her blog here http://danasvoice. blogspot.com.

Notes From Indian Country

'State of the Native Nations' according to Harvard

By Tim Giago (Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Founded by Professor Stephen Cornell and Professor Joseph P. Kalt at Harvard University in 1987, The Harvard Project on American Indian Economic Development has taken a wide range of its research, with comments from prominent members of the Indian community, and published a book titled, "The State of the Native Nations."

About the book Gregory Cajete, Associate Professor and Director of the Native American Studies Program at the University of New Mexico writes on the back cover, "The State of the Native Nations fills a void that currently exists for easily accessible, self-contained reflective research related to building Native Nations. It will certainly be a sought after course reader within Native programs throughout the U. S. and Canada."

I always get a little concerned when I read such proclamations. For one, I always approach any book attempting to establish boundaries on Native American activities, then and now, with extreme trepidation. It is a very complex issue and one that remains a dark hole to most Americans.

On many of the topics ranging from tribal government to education, comments by Indian individuals familiar with the basic topics are relevant and cogent and their comments bring the academic analysis of the subject matter to a personal level. In other words, these individual Indian scholars and tribal members bring feelings and heart to the world of hard and often heartless statistics.

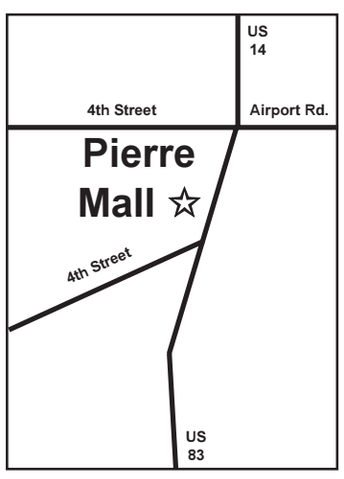
When reviewing any book about American Indians, I always go to the topic most familiar to me, and in this book that topic is listed under "Media." Having spent the last 30 plus years as an active member of the Indian media, I have experienced many of its ups and downs and have been a part of its national growth.

This chapter of the book was a disappointment to me. On so many topics in the book the authors were able to find Native Americans writers familiar with such wide-ranging topics from tribal - federal government relations, to culture. And yet when dealing with a topic like the media, a field filled with Native American journalists of every stripe, no Native journalist was called upon to write about a subject I find most vital to the continued economic development in Indian country.

The anonymous person chosen to write the chapter on "Media" knew very little about the subject matter. For example the book declares, "In 1984 a group of Native American journalists at Pennsylvania State University created the Native America Press Association." Not true. The Native American Press Association, later to become the Native American Journalists Association, was created on the Choctaw Nation in Oklahoma in 1984. In reading the book's assumption, one wonders if there was a group of Native American students at Penn State that created the NAPA. Well, the truth of the matter is that Professor Bill Dulaney, a journalism professor at Penn State, Adrian Louis, my managing editor at the Lakota Times, and I, wrote and received a grant from the Gannett Foundation to finance an "organizational meeting" at Penn State, and we summoned by letter and phone as many Native journalists as we could find and this first meeting would confirm that we did need such an organization and would lead to the Choctaw Nation meeting where NAPA (now NAJA) was formed and named. Once again, Mr. Louis, Professor Dulaney and I raised the funds through the Gannett Foundation to hold the meeting on the Choctaw Nation.

As the editor and publisher of the former Lakota Times, I was elected as the first president of the new organization, Anita Austin of the Native American Rights Fund as treasurer, Mary Polanco, editor of the Jicarilla Chieftain as secretary and Loren Tapahe, publisher of the Navajo Times as vice president.

Another error in the "Media" chapter states that my car was firebombed because I published articles that "apparently displeased the tribal members." No, it was not my car that was firebombed, but it was my newspaper office that was firebombed. And it was firebombed because I wrote an editorial that was critical of the American Indian Movement. At a meeting in Denver in later years it was confirmed to me by a high ranking member of AIM that yes, it was AIM that ordered the bombing of my newspaper office.



But despite these errors of omission and commission The State of the Native Nations is a comprehensive and educational book for any person deeply interested in learning about the ins and outs of Indian country. I highly recommend it especially for the contributions by essayists like Marge Anderson, former Chief Executive of the Mille Lacs Band of Ojibwe, the Honorable Robert Yazzie, Chief Justice Emeritus of the Navajo Nation Supreme Court, Sherry Salway Black, former board member of the First Nation Development Institute and Yvette Roubideaux, Assistant Professor, College of Medicine, University of Arizona.

But if Professor Cornell and Kalt write any more books about Indians, especially one that concerns the Native American media, I hope they search out and find a Native American journalist to write that chapter. Maybe then they will get it right because, after all, if there are glaring errors in one chapter, how many exist in others?

Cantrell wins NABC title bout

TACOMA, Wash. - On June 23, the Native American Boxing Council had the first light heavy weight championship bout, in Tacoma at the Emerald Queen Casino. This was the first time in history that two natives fought for a professional title belt.

The Native American Boxing Council has taken off to a great start with native pro fighters through out the United States, Canada, and Mexico. Criteria includes being a member of a recognized tribe.

The NABC falls under the umbrella of World Boxing Council and the National American Boxing Federation. The NABC Committee consists of President Gerald Wofford, members Lou Duva of New York, Larry Gruonds of Oklahoma, Darrel John of Utah and Chissie Spencer of Manderson, S.D.

Spencer had the honor of presenting the championship title belt in Tacoma on television. The champion Roger Cantrell from Fort Peck, Mont, with a record of 12-0 defeated John Corn, Jr. from Menominee Reservation in Wisconsin with a record of 49-14. Cantrell was the winner by stopping Corn in the fourth round.

The next fight will take place in Oklahoma, where Josh Steele of Manderson and Emerson Chasing Bear will both make their pro debut.

Chisse Spencer, a board member of the Native American Boxing Council, presents Roger Cantrell with the championship belt.

Clifford receives $1,000 Coca Cola scholarship

KYLE - Thelma Clifford, a student at Oglala Lakota College has been awarded a $1,000 scholarship from the Coca-Cola Scholars Foundation.

Through the Coca-Cola Two-Year Colleges Scholarship Program, the Foundation awards a total of 400 scholarships annually to students attending higher-education institutions granting two-year degrees. In April, one scholar from each state received a $2,000 scholarship from Coca-Cola through the New Century Scholar Program of the American Association of Community Colleges and Phi Theta Kappa, the two-year college scholastic honorary organization.

The Coca-Cola Two Year Colleges Scholarship Program is made possible with funding from the Joseph B. Whitehead Foundation.

The Whitehead Foundation provides grants in support of human services initiatives.

The late Joseph B. Whitehead was one of the original bottlers of Coca-Cola.

OLC's Lakota summer artist series schedule

KYLE - Oglala Lakota College opened the Oglala Lakota Summer Artist Series on June 11 and since then 12 Oglala Lakota artists will be featured throughout the summer at OLC's Historical Center at their Piya Wiconi. The center is located on campus six miles southwest of Kyle.

The series promotes public awareness of the arts of the Oglala Lakota people of the Pine Ridge and the surrounding area, and educates our own people and the people of other cultures and places to the richness and the importance of the arts to the Lakota culture and traditions.

The following is the schedule for the artist series:

July 9-14 Donald Montileaux - color pencil

July 16-21, Sam Two Bulls - mixed media

July 23-28, Diane Comes - beadwork

July 30-Aug. 4, Genevieve Bluebird - acrylics

August 6-11, Tilda St. Pierre - beadwork

August 13-18, Fred Menard - quill/beadwork

August 20-25, Stephanie Sorbel - beadwork

August 27-Sept. 1, Daniel Long Soldier - acrylics

September 3-8, Echo Red Bear - quill/beadwork

The Oglala Lakota Summer Artist Series coincides with the June 2007 opening of the Oglala Lakota College Historical Center. The center contains a prominent display of art and photographs that chronicle the history of the Oglala Lakota from the early 1800's to the Wounded Knee Massacre in 1890. An audiotape of this history provides greater meaning to the displays.

"We are into our fourth year with the June opening of the Historical Center and the Artist Series and we are extremely pleased with the amount of visitors, and the response to the exhibits." said President Thomas Shortbull. He adds, "We feel we are accomplishing our goal of educating people on the deep history of the Oglala Lakota through the audiotape and the photos as well as the expression of the history through the art exhibited by local artists."

Area rodeo champs honored

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett
Times Editor

KYLE - A host of local Oglala Lakota cowboys and cowgirls were honored during a "Cowboy Celebration" held at the Little Wound School gymnasium on June 27. The emcee for the evening was Charles Brewer and entertainment was provided by Walt Hernandez and the Dakota Outlaw Band of Mission.

The honorees hailed from a number of well-known rodeo families, in addition to some who have distinguished themselves over time with their outstanding accomplishments. The list of those who received certificates of appreciation and honoring included Shiloh Amiotte, Joe Wilson, Jesse Wilson, Rollie Wilson, Luke Meeks, Jeremy Meeks, Grady Brunsch, Chad Brunsch, Lacey Curr and Justin Meeks.

Joe Wilson is a INFR bareback qualifier and a 2005 National Little Britches Rodeo Association world championship all around cowboy and also worked a stunt double for John Travolta in the movie Wild Hogs and was in the movie Comanche Moon.

Jesse Wilson is currently rank 30th in the PRCA Saddle Bronc standings. three time INFR qualifier and 2001-02 National Little Britches Saddle Bronc champion.

Rollie Wilson is four time INFR qualifier in bareback and saddle bronc and has a listing of many titles he holds.

Luke Meeks also holds many titles among 2003 PRCA tophand Badlands Cowboy and 2003 PRCA Badlands Circuit Champion Bullrider.

Jeremy Meeks is the 1998 National High School Saddle Bronc championship and Grady Brunsch is well known bare back champion.

Lacey Curr begin her rodeo career since she was three years old and has a championship career up to her current qualifying for the college finals in the Great Plains Region.

Justin Meeks is considered one of the best Oglala Lakota bullfighters around and recently retired from bull riding. He also served in the United States Air Force during Desert Storm.

Rueben "Boyd" Clifford of Montana and formerly of Kyle was honored as an Indian National Finals Rodeo bareback champion and his family was present to receive his award. Legendary Oglala Lakota champion, Howard Hunter was also honored in addition to Dallas Louden who was a breakaway calf roper.

Wayne Witt, Jr, the 2004 Great Plains Rodeo Association bull riding champion was also recognized.

Ruth Brown of Wanblee worked for three weeks to coordinate the honoring and wanted to ensure that local cowboys and cowgirls are recognized as is done in other sports. Those who were honored received a star quilt, an OST tribal flag in addition to a certificate. Brown had coordinated similar honors of rodeo cowboys and cowgirls in the past years.

There were a lot of people in attendance for the celebration and the place was decked out very nice, as were the cakes. Many of the young people are positive role models for the younger generation as some are also college graduates. Brown said, "I hope to see Kyle put up a sign that notes that it is the Home of Rodeo champions. We are very proud of Shiloh Amiotte. Amiotte is currently leading the Indian National Finals Rodeo tour and is the 2007 and 2006 go-round winner in INFR in bareback riding."

Brown also said, "Thank you to Little Wound School for allowing this activity to honor our cowboys and cowgirls. Thank you also to Sylvia Brown, Jane Wilcox, and Dana Brown for making the quilts. Thank you also to Illa Dillon for helping me along with Connie Ruff and Nanette Kills In Water for helping with the set up. Also, Marguerite Heathershaw who embroidered the quilts and Terri Blue and her staff at Anpetu Luta for sponsoring this activity."

Animals rights group calls for investigation of Local Pride

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) - An animal-rights group has called for a state investigation into a Gordon meatpacking plant it claims mistreats animals during the slaughtering process.

In a complaint filed Monday with the Sheridan County Attorney, the group People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals said Local Pride LLC allows animals to remain conscious for up to two minutes after their throats are cut during the kosher slaughtering process, among other things.

PETA vice president Bruce Friedrich called the practice illegal and cruel.

Local Pride opened in June 2006 under an agreement between the Sholom Rubashkin family of New York and the Oglala Lakota Tribe's empowerment zone.

The Rubashkins also own the world's largest kosher plant, Agriprocessors in Postville, Iowa, which was scrutinized last year by the U.S. Department of Agriculture for cruelty to animals. The investigation came after Agriprocessor's slaughtering methods were criticized by PETA as cruel and inhumane.

The U.S. attorney's office in Cedar Rapids did not file charges in that case.

PETA said in its latest complaint that an undercover investigation of Local Pride was carried out in May as follow-up to its claims against Agriprocessor.

The alleged violations of state, federal and kosher laws cited in the complaint include: the animals are allowed to writhe in pain for up to two minutes after their throats are cut; and staff tear the animals' necks with a meat hook and cut tags from their ears while they are still conscious.

A video of the alleged mistreatment at Local Pride was posted Monday on PETA's Web site, www.goveg.com.

A message left for Rubashkin at his Iowa office was not immediately returned Monday.

According to PETA, a similar complaint filed June 29 with the USDA has prompted a federal probe of Local Pride.

USDA spokeswoman Amanda Eamich on Monday confirmed that a specialist was sent to the plant to observe the slaughtering process, but said no violations of the federal Humane Methods of Slaughter Act were found.

When Local Pride opened last year, the company employed nearly 100 plant employees and slaughtered about 110 cattle per week.

A plant manager contacted Monday would not release updated figures and referred all questions to Rubashkin.

Sicangu attorney Ramon Roubideaux dies at 82

Tucson, Ariz. - Ramon Roubideaux, well-known attorney to many Lakota people died on Tuesday. He was enrolled in the Rosebud Sioux tribe and left a legacy in the legal profession having represented many Native groups over his career including that of a negotiator during the occupation of Wounded Knee.

He retired in 2002 and moved to Tucson, Ariz. where he lived with his wife and daughter. His career included having served as assistant Attorney General, a city attorney and a states attorney for seven consecutive terms. He was apparently the first Lakota attorney to enter into private practice in the state of South Dakota and worked in the Rapid City area.

At 82 years old, Roubideaux served a lifetime as a role model for many Native lawyers and students and the legacy he built will live on, according to his family.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I have a couple of questions for you. First, do you see me having another baby? I have been patiently waiting for another baby, but it hasn't happened yet and I am getting a little discouraged about it.

Do you see anything wrong? Next, do you see me and my spouse together for a long time? He has been pressuring me into marriage and I don't want to get married, but he keeps asking. I just want to know, if we do get married, will it last? Will it be worth it?

Question

Dear Question:

Yes, I do see two children, first a girl, then a boy. Just wait a while. Pregnancy is probably this spring.

If you have doubts about marrying this man then don't. I see, however that you will probably change your mind within a couple of years.

Waiting is very smart, because you will know him better and know that the choice is a good one. Make sure that he is a tolerant, sane, loving man without addictions to drugs and/or alcohol. If he is still drinking when you marry him the relationship will not work. If he is clean and sober and so are you it will work very well.

You have a choice which reality you chose to live in. Live in the one where you can have a good marriage and good life. You create your own future through today's choices. Nothing is written in stone so the future for you is open and based on your own decisions.

Live in a good way and you will have a good life.

Dear Anna,

I have a few questions and would like your input. I keep praying about these two but don't really have the answers. First, I went to a medicine man about three years ago and he told me that someone is doing something to me, he removed it, (which I can't say what he removed and how) but I did see it.

He also said that they would do it again, which they did, so I went back to again and got it removed. I kind of knew a long time before I went to see him that something was going on, he just confirmed it. He also said they would know as soon as it was removed. Anna, why do people do things like this? He said he couldn't tell me who because he didn't know.

How can I get rid of this? Why won't they leave me alone, I don't have a clue who it would be I don't want to hurt anyone. Second, I have been with this person for a couple of years and I am getting more attached and really caring for him but we haven't said anything definite about the relationship,

I am afraid of failing, getting hurt and just down right scared. Anna, do we belong together? He's good to me, and the more I am with him the more I care. That's the thing, am I wasting my time? I just want to know before I open myself up to someone and only have my heart broken again. The last relationship was just too painful. Thank you Anna and my prayers are with you.

Don't Want To Be Hurt

Dear Don't want to be hurt:

I wonder every day about the people who have bad medicine done and the men that do it. I don't understand it either. The main thing that I see is that blame. Some people are stuck in it. They blame others for everything that is wrong in their lives.

They are angry, resentful, insecure and do not have as much faith in the blessings from the Creator and in knowing that everything is in Divine Order as they do in pain, loss and fear. They suffer from jealousy, anger, and extreme frustration. The price for having medicine done is very grave and brings very bad things (even death) to the person who had the medicine done or to his family members. Still, even though that may be the price, it is done.

The very least that seems to happen is that the medicine man that abuses medicine will eventually lose the backing of his spirits, or in other words, he will be a man without medicine.

I do several things to protect myself. One, of course, is prayer. The second is that I wear sage on my body at all times. Another is that I keep four prayer ties (one for each of the four directions, red, blue, green and yellow) in my medicine pouch that I also wear. I also carry a rock, black tourmaline, which is also a protector and will help absorb anything that may be thrown against you. I want to say now, that all of the medicine people that I know are good men.

They do not practice bad medicine. I also want to add, that most of the Lakota people are good people....and even though they have hard lives they do not wish bad things on others. It is rare for bad medicine to be done, but it is impactful. I pray every day that this practice will stop.

I see the man you are with and you are good together. Lose your fear of rejection and tell him that you want to know where you stand. Everybody that is not currently in a relationship has had a bad experience. That should not jade your future.

Please know that the reason relationships do not work is because they are not meant to...if you are with the wrong person it will end so that you will be available for the right person. I see that you and your friend will work this out and have a good future together. You are both scared of being hurt and of making the wrong choices for yourself. Consider this an adventure in love and let go of the fear of failure.

Dear Anna,

How are you? I hope all is good with you. I thank you for your time in answering my other questions. I really do appreciate your response.

Sometimes I think, "Hey she is right about what is happening to my life". But the reason why I am writing to you is because I did get out of my relationship with my children's dad, and I know it is for the best. But I still have a fear of him and what he can possibly do to I and my children. It's scary and I think that maybe if I was on a good level with him that I wouldn't have to fear anything, but I still do. I pray that Tunkasila keeps my family safe, and I wonder if that is enough? I don't know what life has in store for me but I know I am happy where I am, I am content with my life.

Sometimes my life gets so stressed with my children and life. I recently lost a really good job I was supposed to have until a later date, and I'm sad about it. My supervisor told me she has other openings, do you think I might be hired back on?

I have two different colleges I'm thinking about, but my files are incomplete and I get a little slow about getting it updated. Sometimes I can feel sad about the way my life turned out, but I think I'm strong enough to get over it.

I think too much about men, and I don't want to, I wish I just knew who was the one for me and get on with that but, I know it won't happen, but it'd be nice. But Anna, I thank you for you time and your assistance, you are truly gifted.

Taurus Woman

Dear Taurus Woman:

Please learn to trust yourself. Your ex and you can find common ground for the sake of your children. You do have to make sure that you do not jeopardize your children with any kind of questionable behavior because your ex and his family will be watching you.

Please get right on the school thing. Call everybody you need to and get your records together. Do it now. Yes, you can have another job where you used to work. Apply now.

You have a wonderful relationship coming up in about a year. That will give you time to get yourself together and to focus on your children without interference or other distractions. It also gives your ex time to lose his interest in you, your life and what you are doing.

The man I see has long hair, a beautiful smile, and works hard with his hands. He is also an artist. Good luck, have patience, you are doing great!

Dear Anna,

Hey, how are you doing? I hope you are doing fine. I have some questions for you, so I guess I'll start here. My great grandpa owns some land in Montana or some where that way and they built a casino on it and I guess there is a lawsuit. My great grandpa isn't alive anymore but they said we were supposed to get a lump sum of money or something like that. Do you see my family getting any money?

I know I am not supposed to be worrying about this but do you see me finding a boyfriend soon. Oh yeah, would I ever get to meet you? My sisters got to meet you and I am so jealous. Have a good day!

Just Being Curious

Dear Just Being Curious:

Yes, there is some money coming from the land in Montana. I think it will be awarded in a little over a year.

I love your expression, "finding a boyfriend." Where are you looking? I can just see you say, "Hey, look what I found in the back yard...a boyfriend!" During this next school year you will "find" one. Relax, and let things fall into place in a natural way.

Yes, we will meet. Get your sisters to bring you into my office. I will be looking forward to meeting you. Blessings dear.

Dear Anna,

How's everything? My two sisters are just big ole' brats and that's what it seems like because they always get to do things like leave whenever they feel like leaving and hardly ever have to help out around the house and with my mom kid's but what I want to know is when will I ever get my chance to stop being the black sheep of the my family?

I always get left out it just isn't fun, no teenagers wants to stay home all the time all their teenager years. Right? There's this boy I like and do you think there is a chance of us getting together anytime in the future or this upcoming school year?

A Restless Mind

Dear Restless Mind:

You are correct, no one, teenager or not, wants to stay home all the time. I was in the same position as you when I was a teenager. I wrote to "Dear Abby" and complained that I had to work in my parent's resort during the only rodeo that hit our town once a year. She told me that there would be other rodeo's and to just help my parents.

Well, there were other rodeo's but we moved and I have never been to another one in that town. However, I survived and I developed a real respect for helping family. They are gone now, and I am glad that I was there for them when they needed me.

Your other siblings are a bit older than you. You will be able to go more in the next few years than right now.

Also, you can nicely talk with your mom about usually being the only one that has to help out. There should be more balance and sharing of that responsibility and I see her changing things around so that there is more shared help with your sisters.

I see two different boy friends this year - but nothing that is really serious. Enjoy your year and have fun with all of your friends - both boys and girls.

I see you liking school this year, making two new really good friends, and getting yourself into athletic shape.

Good Luck!

8th Year of Severe Drought Conditions on Pine Ridge Reservation

Our department would like to remind the Oyate of the Pine Ridge Reservation that we are entering our 8th year of drought conditions. The weather has been kind lately, but we know it will heat up very quickly and every drop of water is precious.

Be Water-Wise Outdoors

- Try watering lawns in the early morning or late afternoon to prevent evaporation and scorching of the grass during mid-day sun.
- Try not to water on windy days
- Try using drip irrigation for your lawns. Saves 75% more water than s prinklers by limiting evaporation.
- Over-watering can cause fungus to form brown patches on lawns.
- Water lawns and shrubs once every five days to promote longer stronger roots.
- When mowing try keeping grass 3 inches long to help in moisture absorption.
- Keep swimming pools covered to stop debris and to help prevent evaporation.
- Try backwashing your swimming pool's filter weekly to help keep the water clean.
- Clean feet before entering pool.
- Make sure all livestock watering devices have an adequate float system that does not leak.
- Report all yard hydrant and thermo-line leaks to proper authorities.

Be Water-Wise Indoors

- Report all leaking bathroom and kitchen fixtures.
- When washing clothes use the right water setting for the load.
- Listen for toilet constantly running or filling when not in use (a leaky toilet can account for up to 1400 gallons of water lost per day, while the average household uses only 350 gallons per day.)
- A leaking toilet can cause your septic system to back up because of over saturation.
- Try using low flow toilets (1.5 to 2 gallons per flush), old toilets use up to 5 gallons per flush.
- Don't use your toilet as a garbage disposal.
- Turn off water while brushing teeth, shaving and washing dishes.
- Take fast showers instead of baths.
- Use low flow fixtures in baths and kitchens.
- An Ultra low flow showerhead uses 1.5 gallons per minute, while conventional showerheads can use up to 5 gallons per minute.

In memory of Deanna Faith

I know you'll be waiting for us in the sky Deanna, I know that you are at peace, It helps so much to set our hearts at ease.We loved you more than anyone could know, It hurts us so bad to have to let you go, But I know God knows what's best, That's why he put our baby to rest.We cry and think of you every day It just doesn't seem fair for God to take you away. I'm trying to find comfort in all of my grief,For now you are free from all suffering and pain, love So our great lost, became your great gain.We know that someday we all have to die, It makes us so happy, Knowing you'll be waiting for us in the sky. Jesus loves you and so do we

I thought I saw you're face today, in the sparkle of the morning sun.' And then I heard the angel say, " their work on earth is done." I thought I heard your voice today, then laugh your hearty laugh. And then I heard the angel say, " the spirit never dies." I thought I saw my broken heart in the cresent of the moon. And then I heard the angel say, "the lord is coming soon." I thought you had left me, for the stars so far above. And then I heard the angel say, " They're with you every day." The sun the wind the moon the stars, will forever be around, Reminding you of the love you shared, and the peace they've finally found.

ROSEBUD COMPREHENSIVE HEALTHCARE FACILITY

CONTRACT HEALTH SERVICES ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENTS

*Our Mission...*To Provide quality health care to Native Americans and Alaska Natives through health promotion and disease prevention using a multidisciplinary approach incorporating Tribal values, culture and spirituality.

❖ General Eligibility Requirements
- You must be an enrolled member of a Federally Recognized Tribe and live in the Contract Health Service Delivery Area (Lyman, Tripp, Mellette, Gregory, Bennett, Cherry, Todd). If you are a non-member of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe, you must reside within Reservation boundaries and been identified as having close social and economic ties to the Rosebud Sioux Tribe.

❖ Other Persons Eligible for Services
- Non-Indian woman pregnant with an eligible Indian's child, but only during the period of her pregnancy through postpartum (generally about six weeks after delivery). In cases where the woman is not married to the eligible Indian under applicable State or tribal law, paternity must be acknowledged in writing by the Indian or determined by order of a court of competent jurisdiction.
- Member of an eligible Indians household in a public health hazard situation
- Adopted, foster and stepchildren of an eligible Indian only to the age of 19

❖ Persons NOT Eligible For Services
- Non- Indian
- Non-Indian widow/ widower, or divorcee of an eligible Indian
- Non-Indian spouse of eligible Indian (except in case of pregnancy, as stated above)
- Members of terminated tribes
- Canadian and Mexican Indians

What is the difference between emergency and non-emergency care?

EMERGENCY CARE: This refers to emergency care only (immediate threat to loss of life, limb, or senses). CHS must be notified by the patient or someone acting on the patient's behalf within 72 hours after treatment and/or admittance to another facility. It is the INDIVIDUAL'S responsibility to make sure that CHS is notified. Medical records pertaining to the treatment received must be mailed or fax to the Contract Health office to be reviewed. If the treatment received is determined to be emergent by the committee, the request will be processed for payment.

NON-EMERGENCY CARE: Prior approval must be obtained before care is received. In order to obtain approval you must call (605) 747-3216 for the Contract Health office. There after, the CHS committee will make the decision to approve/deny the request. If approval is not granted before the care or the individual chooses to obtain medical services without approval, the individual will be responsible for the bill incurred.

Iron Cloud named interim OST housing director

PINE RIDGE - "A three member review board from HUD returned in April to evaluate what improvements had been made by housing from their original monitoring report that included 15 findings," said Paul Iron Cloud, a member of John Steele's management team and past executive director of the housing authority, "although they stated there was progress there was still over 50 percent of the findings left to deal with and they were concerned and warned the tribe of impending sanctions if the pace of the improvements didn't pick up."

During the week of the Fourth of July, the Heath and Human services committee in collaboration with the executive board suspended the current board of directors of Oglala Sioux Lakota Housing and selected Paul Iron cloud as interim director for 30 days. The council needs to reaffirm the actions for them to be valid. Iron Cloud, a past tribal president, served as executive director of housing from 1992 until August of 2000.

Last year's Monitoring Report on OSLH included concerns about procurement, out of compliance with Davis Bacon and Labor Standards, out of compliance with Indian preference requirements, not maintaining or inspecting units, no current inventory of fixed

Lakota Nation committee re-thinks changes, adds new teams, SDHSAA announces proposed new district alignments

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - "After reviewing the financial situation, the attendance and the income from a four day Lakota Nation event, it became apparent that to financially break even we needed to go four days," said Bryan Brewer, long time LNI director, "we thought going to a three day event with two eight team brackets would save the participating schools money but in the end it would hurt the tournaments ability to offer the variety of activities and events that make today's Lakota Nation such a successful happening, a festival of activities that bring so many people together in Rapid City in December, not just for basketball but for the hand games, the knowledge and language competitions, the wrestling, the honorings and the chance to see and visit so many people."

In addition to discussing the format change, the committee looked at going back to an all Indian tournament. The committee changed their mind on that and will continue to include teams like Custer, Hill City and St. Thomas More according to Brewer. Currently St. Thomas More has chosen to drop out of the LNI tournament but plans to re-apply for the 2010/2011 cycle.

"We have really enjoyed being in the LNI tournament, it was a special part of our schedule," said Dave Hollenbeck, Cavalier coach, "but we hear that the committee was going to an all Indian tourney in 2008 and we had invitations from two classics in the

Father Hatcher addresses RST council on controversial issues

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett
Times Editor

ROSEBUD - In response to an earlier RST council resolution in which Father John Hatcher, Superior of St. Francis Mission was asked to leave the Rosebud Sioux reservation, Fr. Hatcher addressed the RST council on Thursday, July 12. A KINI FM radio public service announcement noted the fact that Fr. Hatcher would be addressing the tribal council and that all parishioners and others could attend and show their support.

KINI FM did a commendable task of carrying the address on-air as it began after 1 p.m. and went well into the early evening with many local tribal members providing testimony on behalf of and against Fr. Hatcher. Perry DeCory, former deejay at KINI helped to coordinate the live transmission originating from the RST council chambers.

Fr. Hatcher noted that the purpose of his visit was to inform the tribal council as to the range of services that St. Francis Mission was providing to the community. He provided a packet of information to council members and said that his particular responses to the earlier charges were contained in the packet.

Fr. Hatcher also made reference to a study that was conducted by the Cheeseman Foundation of Rapid City in which parishioners from Rosebud and Pine Ridge were able to respond to a survey as to what their expectations of the Catholic Church were. He said, "We face a common crisis of suicide, drugs, alcohol, violence against women, and demoralized youth. There is a struggle to preserve the language and culture. St. Francis Mission is trying to bring healing to families and reach out to the 43 percent of young people here."

He also made reference to a survey that was conducted at Todd County High School which pointed out that many youth have no spiritual base and very little confidence in tribal government. SFM is also providing religious education or "faith formation" to over 400 children in the St. Francis and Spring Creek area. Fr. Hatcher said, "People want the church involved in alcohol recovery and we have one in St. Francis and White River. We have sweats and a medicine man once a month."

Finally, Fr. Hatcher noted that SFM is working to provide adult education in which adults can study online and earn a degree. He also spoke of a "Nativity School" which would take 20 students and after the eighth grade they would be fluent in Lakota and then prepare for college.

Claudette Sabors of St. Francis testified about the employment practices at SFM which is used interchangeably with RES or the Rosebud Educational Society. She said, "A lot of people put in for jobs, but do not get hired. That has to be changed. There is a lot of politics up there…Just to get rid of people and hurt people, we need to quit that."

Ms. Iron Shell, a 20 year old Sicangu Lakota said she had returned from the Institute of American Indian Arts in Santa Fe, NM and was working at the St.

Afraid of His Horses memorial stone marks history, wacipi celebration

By Sandra White Shield
Special to the Times

OGLALA - Nellie Two Bulls long wanted a memorial to her ancestor, Afraid of His Horses. Her children completed her wish on July 14th near her home in Oglala.

Two Bulls's daughters Melvina Winters, Cheril Between Lodges and Linda Two Bulls held a memorial stone setting ceremony, a meal, and a traditional wacipi to mark the occasion.

"Old Man Afraid of His Horses was Nellie's great, great grandpa" said Winters. She related how Two Bulls had started the process of the memorial before she died, giving land which is to be used for cultural events, to the Afraid of Horses Committee. There are plans for a permanent shade and perhaps lights for night pow wows.

Two Bull's friend, Ruth Ziokowski, of Crazy Horse Mountain, helped with the creation of the stone monument. The carved piece of granite comes from the Crazy Horse Monument. The front of the piece is engraved with "In Memory of Chief Old Man Afraid of His Horses, 1802 - 1887, Memorial Park, Ta Sunke Kokepapi, "Gift from Crazy Horse Memorial," Matt and Nellie Two Bulls." The back of the monument shows the drill marks made in excavating it from Crazy Horse Mountain.

Chief Oliver Red Cloud was called on to offer words encouraging families to continue in the good way of our relatives that came before us. His words said not to lose the family circles. The honor of revealing the memorial stone was shared with Henry "Sarge" Old Horn.

Old Horn recently discovered his relationship to Two Bulls because of a chance meeting with Two Bulls' state so we just asked the committee to drop out this coming year."

St. Thomas More plans to play Little Wound and Madison in a new classic in Mitchell and two other East River teams to replace the four LNI games this coming year.

According to Brewer, originally two vacancies for next year were created by a one year contract for Heart of the Earth and Hill City being dropped; they were going to be replaced by Flandreau Indian and White River. After further developments, Hill City will remain a participant and St. Thomas More, Heart of the Earth and St. Stevens will not participate this year, White River, Flandreau Indian and Omaha Nation will be part of the 2007 lineup which will include a four day 16 team boy's tournament and a 16 team girl's tournament.

The seeding meeting for both tournaments will take place in Rapid City in late September or early October during the Lakota Nation volleyball tourney. For the boy's tourney, St. Thomas More played in the last three LNI championship games, losing to Lower Brule in 2004, beating Little Wound in 2005 and losing to Little Wound in 2006.

Activities Association staff announces proposed new alignments for high school sports

PIERRE - Based on average daily membership numbers for each school's 9-11 grades, the South Dakota High School Activities Association realigns the districts and regions across the state every two years. For basketball, volleyball, cross country and track and field, schools with 450 students and above in grades nine through eleven are in Class AA, schools with 90 to 449.999 are in Class A and schools with 89.999 and below are in Class B.

This year five Class A schools (Clark, Chester Area, Irene-Wakonda, Alcester-Hudson and Elkton) lost students and dropped down to Class B while three Class B schools (Baltic, Tiospa Zina and Ipswich) gained students and moved up to Class A. The movement up or down in classification forced changes in districts and regions, all in East River though. Tiospa Zina would be in District 1A with Sisseton and Britton-Hecla.

Although no schools West River moved up or down, Platte and Gregory expressed concern about being in a Region (Region 7A) that had Gregory and Platte on the east end and Pine Ridge on the west end.

There was a long distance between the schools and there tended to be long debates about where the regional championships would be held, in Rapid City at the Civic Center or in Pierre or Ft. Pierre. The activities staff proposed reworking Districts 13A, 12A and 11A.

For the last two years, District 13A included Todd County, Winner, Gregory and Platte, the new district proposed would be Eagle Butte, McLaughlin, Mobridge and Stanley County who with District 14A (Pine Ridge, Little Wound, St. Francis and Bennett County) would make up Region 7A. The staff propose to make Todd County, Lyman, Crow Creek and Winner District 12A; for the last two years 12A has been Cheyenne Eagle Butte, McLaughlin, Mobridge and Stanley County.

District 11A will include Platte-Geddes, Gregory, Miller Area and Chamberlain and for the last two years Chamberlain, Crow Creek, Lyman and Miller Area are in District 11.

Districts 14A, 15A and 16A would all stay the same if the proposed alignment passes. Red Cloud would stay in District 15A with Custer, Hill City and Hot Springs.

The proposed alignments made by the staff will go to the SDHSAA board on August 8 at 1 p.m. in Sioux Falls to be approved. Additional changes could happen that day.

assets, no total development cost records for each development and renovation project, failure to self monitor in accordance with 24CFR 1000.502, tribal council and board members are not current in re-certifications and rent payments, not complying with tenant and homebuyer selection policies, problems with conflict of interests, not maintaining necessary and reasonable costs, lack of internal controls, not properly accounting for program income, not following policy for payroll advances and employee loans and having a delinquent fiscal audit report.

"The committee and XB have asked me to get the place back in working order," said Iron Cloud, "we have a good staff, we have just had too much turnover at the director's position - we need to work on getting some of the stalled projects completed, we need to get the boarded up low rent units fixed up and back in operation, we need to get the audits done, deal with HUD's findings among other things."

Iron Cloud is confident that the problems at housing are fixable but it will not be overnight, it will take some time.

Iron Cloud will be assisted by a reconstruction board made up of Emma "Pinky" Iron Plume Clifford, Partnership for Housing director, Denise Mesteth, tribal land director and Jim Wagenlander, an attorney with a great deal of experience dealing with HUD and tribal housing issues.

The log home ownership homes, Ellsworth units, two Rural Development housing projects for Oglala and Pine Ridge and concerns about some of the elderly/disabled complexes will be top concerns for Iron Cloud and his reconstruction board.

"It will be up to the council on what direction housing will take," said Iron Cloud, "they are meeting at the end of the month and it is up to them whether I stay in, what to do with the board or really what direction they want to go with housing and deciding how best to deal with the concerns brought up by HUD over a year ago."

School board election to be held at St. Francis Indian School

ROSEBUD - Earlier, the Rosebud Sioux tribal council suspended the charter of St. Francis Indian School and a resolution was passed to establish a Review Board comprised of local Sicangu educators.

One of the tasks of the Review Board is to collaborate with SFIS in setting up new school board elections which will be open only to Rosebud Sioux tribal members.

Five of the positions are to be elected at large at an election that coincides with the RST primary election on August 23 and will be open from July 17 to July 31.

Nominating petitions and affidavits will be available in the RST Secretary's office and the positions will be served in staggered terms. The top three candidates will serve four terms and the remaining two candidates will serve two year terms.

In 2009 all terms will be four year staggered terms. Voting at the 13 designated polling places for the school board election will occur at the same time as the RST primary election and votes will be placed in a separate ballot box.

A candidate must have reached his or her 18th birthday and have resided on the Rosebud reservation one-year prior to the school board election.

All candidates must have a Certificate of Enrollment and the affidavit will need to be signed by 15 enrolled tribal members.

The members of the RST Education Department Review Board include, Dr. Richard Bordeaux, Victor Douville, Nancy Keller-Hernandez, Eustace Night Shield, Sherry Red Owl, Ben Black Bear, Jr., and Dr. Archie Beauvais.

Francis Museum on an internship. After serving as a tour guide for the museum and the church, Fr. Hatcher and attorney Robert Doody fired her for what they described as incorrect information being given to the public. She said, "He could have pulled me aside, I don't deserve to be treated that way…I don't know if I could work there again. He could do it again. I want compensation or a scholarship."

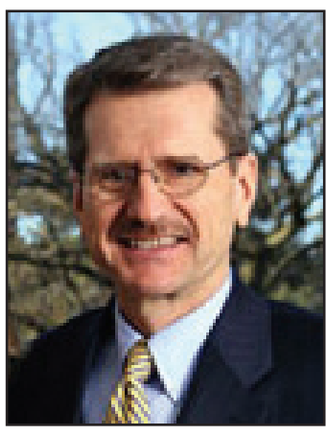
Sicangu elder, Katherine Clairmont said, "Spotted Tail wanted the black robes here. We only have 2-3 priests. You council reps should think before you kick him out." Her comment was followed by applause.

Former RST council representative of St. Francis, Rick Young, offered comment. He said, "I want to comment about the young lady here. That was nothing compared to what we were asked to do at St. Francis Mission. Fr. Hatcher is kind of a whimp compared to back then…there is no need for an attack on the church. Don't mix religion and politics. It shouldn't even be on the council floor."

Bonnie Hairy Shirt, who brought the original complaint to the RST tribal council along with Ned Metcalf of Two Strike said, "There are many people who came to me with complaints. I hoped the complaints would stop or that Fr. Hatcher would change. I am not after the artifacts or the museum. The complaints are many from the full bloods." Later in her testimony, Hairy Shirt concluded by saying, "I hope you are not abused by his hands or anger. We are not asking Jesus Christ to move out. He needs to work with an anger program. I am speaking for people who can't speak for themselves."

Former KINI deejay, Perry DeCory, was also terminated by Fr. Hatcher and he went on record as wanting to know the exact reason for his firing. He said, "I keep asking why I was fired and there is no answer. I have no right to go to court. I sit there every night and ask myself 'did I do a good job?' Then, depression sets in. If you can get rid of Father Hatcher, get rid of the 'at will' clause."

There was a host of other witnesses and in the interest of space; their testimony was also entered into the record. Some said it was the color of St. Charles church that upset them, or it was the fact God should decide who a good Catholic is and not Fr. Hatcher. Some also described a relative being mistreated by SFM and that there was little opportunity to resolve the matter before being terminated.



Other Sicangu tribal members who provided testimony into the late afternoon and early evening included, Ben Black Bear, Jr., SGU President, Lionel R. Bordeaux, Ned Metcalf, Leroy Hairy Shirt, Kerwin Eagleman and a couple of others who remained unidentified.

RST council representative, Robert Moore, from Antelope said, "Our tribal attorney and their attorney should be here. Where is the family? Government is not responsible for kids. This body has answered the jurisdictional issue in response to his response…We have no say about Fr. Hatcher, it is up to the diocese." Moore went on to elaborate on the jurisdictional issue when he noted, "Everything in Todd County proper is under the jurisdiction of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe…state laws do apply here. There is no 'at will' clause here. I would suggest that as a tribe, until this is changed, all of us defend and support the constitution of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe."

Finally, the RST council meeting concluded with a resolution asking St. Francis Mission to look at returning excess lands to RST, having the Rapid City diocese conduct an audit of the work that Fr. Hatcher is doing and to allow an arbitration process to proceed when SFM employees have a grievance.

New SDSU president visits Oglala Lakota College, reaffirms relationship

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

Dr. David Chicoine

THREE MILE CREEK - "It is encouraging for us, it isn't that often that state run institutions are willing to come out to tribal colleges to see what we are doing and show their support," said Tom Shortbull, Oglala Lakota College president about SDSU's president visiting on Tuesday; "Dr. David Chicoine included OLC as part of his western trip Tuesday, spoke with the administration, visited with our ag and natural resources department and saw some of our facilities."

After 30 years with the University of Illinois, Chicoine has returned to South Dakota. He grew up in Elk Point where his family has had a farm for many years, earned his bachelors degree at SDSU, masters degrees from Delaware and Western Illinois and a doctorate in agricultural economics from Illinois.

"It's important for us to get out to all parts of the state, we are not the university for Brookings county alone but the entire state and we have a special relationship to the tribal colleges especially since they were recognized as land grant institutions back in 1994," said Chicoine, "we really want to support OLC as they work with the producer on the reservation and maybe steer more people their way to make use of their fine facilities."

Currently OLC has about 25 students involved with the Ag and natural resources department according to the chair, Leslie Henry, there are five about ready to get their degree, 10 students that take a full load and 10 that take one class at a time. Henry and her staff, Michel Melvin, Theresa Lone Hill and Julie Goings and three students, Patricia May, Sabrina Hodges and Faye Lone Hill all were there to participate in the presentation and meeting.

"We had a chance to talk with some of Dr. Chicoine's staff about the possibility of some of the department chairs coming to OLC to see our facilities, especially the labs," said Henry, "there is the potential to expand the program here to do actual research here at OLC, West River is a bit isolated, most of the focus in the state is East River which has a really different agricultural focus than West River - we could be a hub for the region."

"We are working towards a higher level of interaction between OLC and SDSU, this is an issue that tribal government needs to understand,' said Sean Burke, Pine Ridge agricultural extension agent, "we have a grassland environment out here versus corn and soybeans out east and the tribe needs to develop the land resources in a better manner than they have."

"We have had a partnership with SDSU with the Two plus Two Program where our students may attend state colleges and universities to pursue degrees that we do not offer," said Shortbull, "Captain Tasha Standing Soldier who gave the keynote address when we dedicated the veterans monument, finished her associate degree in life science at OLC and went on to get her masters degree in pharmacy from SDSU, that's how we are able to complement each other."

granddaughter, Lynette Two Bulls. Both Nellie Two Bulls and Old Horn had known that ties existed between their geographical regions but not exactly what they were until the chance meeting happened.

The nearly 100 people who were in attendance came from as far away as Norway, Spearfish, Nebraska, Wisconsin, and Montana.

The wacipi at the Two Bulls home grounds was started 31 years ago.

It has always been viewed as a time to honor children, hunka relationships, and soldiers, said Winters.

Next year Shorty Brewer will coordinate a horseback ride in memory of Nellie Two Bulls in conjunction with her memorial.

"We can never be like mom," said Winters, "but we will carry on."

The celebrations held on July 13 to 15 included a walk and run, sponsored by the tribe's health administration. There were feeds each day and elders were honored daily.

There was a princess contest with tiny tots being paid.

The events took place at Afraid of His Horses grounds, which is between Pine Ridge and Oglala.

ACLU to host community meetings in settlement of Winner schools case

RST honors attorneys and others

WINNER - In the case Antoine v. the Winner School District filed on March 8 in Sioux Falls by the American Civil Liberties Union, there was a successful mediated resolution to the case which charged that the school district was hostile to Lakota students and parents.

The case was settled through mediation in Sioux Falls and according to Jennifer Ring of the Dakota ACLU the original document contains some 75 elements that have to be addressed including an annual report to the Rosebud Sioux Tribe by the Winner superintendent of schools. The Tribal Education Director can also attend the Winner school board meetings and ask to be on the agenda. Also, the RST tribal education department will take over the Johnson O'Malley that, heretofore, had been administered by the district.

ACLU attorneys, Catherine Kim, Steven Pevar, Jennifer Ring, paralegal Ana Weibgen and for RST attorney general, Dana Hanna were honored Tuesday, July 17 by the Rosebud Sioux tribal council with a star quilt and a certificate. In a presentation highlighting the main features of the mediated settlement Kim said, "Lakota people have a place at the table now as the Winner School District finally agreed to listen to a Lakota voice."

Certificates of appreciation were also presented to a number of key people who were involved in the class action suit, including Roger and Lavina Milk, Vonna Lopez, Rose Chasing Hawk Mendoza, Charlie Long Crow, Vi Waln, Diz Herman, Marilyn Herman and RST Education Director Cindy Young. Sherry Red Owl and Charlene LaPointe also received purses.

The court ruled that it was a class action suit as there were ten families who filed the suit on behalf of the Lakota children and all Native American families in the school district. The suit charged that for at least the prior ten years the school district has been treating Native students in a discriminatory manner. There are virtually no Native Americans working in the school district, the school district takes statements from Native students involved in disciplinary matters and are used against them later and that Native students are disciplined more harshly than white students.

Attorney Kim also said one of the saddest statistics was the fact that 11 percent of Lakota children who are involved in disciplinary actions are sent to jail.

The settlement, mediated by U. S. Magistrate Judge John E. Simko specified some key terms that the school district must follow and which will require the input of the Winner Native American community as well as the school district.

Ring said that a consent decree will be issued in 60 days by a federal judge after the Lakota families agree to the terms of the settlement. Furthermore, she noted that the decree could be in effect for at least a decade if not years. The Winner School District can show compliance if they show they are meeting the terms of the settlement for four consecutive years.

The ACLU of New York is sponsoring three community meetings for the Winner and Ideal communities to discuss the settlement. On Monday there will be a meeting scheduled at 5:30 p.m. at the Tripp County 4-H Center on south Country Road. Another meeting will be held at the same location at 10 a.m. on Tuesday and a third meeting will be held at the Ideal Community Center at 5:30 p.m. also on Tuesday.

Cindy Young, Director of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe's Education Department, who was instrumental in supporting the litigation efforts of the Lakota plaintiffs in March was invited by Ana Weibgen of the ACLU to attend the meeting. Weibgen wrote, "The settlement outlines a partnership between the Winner/Ideal Native American community and the school district, and representatives from within your community will have important roles to play in making the terms of the settlement come to life."
